Preface

Being part of the Marketing Team at Hotels & More during the project helped me gain a lot of deep and interesting insight into the operations within the company and the field in general. I was able to use my own knowledge as background information as well as information available on spot. The project is relevant for Hotels & More, but also gave me a lot of insight into the importance of targeted marketing. Marion Holtkamp and Vera Lett provided support and were willing to give input at all times which not only improved my work, but also made me reflect and learn about my weak points in general. Their constant support made me feel comfortable throughout the entire semester whereas I also learned to work on a ‘real’ project independently. All interviewees and clients who were willing to share their valuable views and opinions on the topic contributed highly to the project. Hotels & More offering me the office facilities for writing the project was another benefit. It was easy to retrieve information on spot, communicate and make use of advanced IT facilities.

1. Introduction

1.1 The client

Hotels and More Ltd. is a B2B inbound tour operator for Great Britain and Ireland, located in Harrow, Greater London. The company was founded in 1996 and employs approximately 100 multi-lingual staff organizing tailor-made travel products for different source markets. The main source market is Germany (80%), followed by France (9%), Italy, the Netherlands and Scandinavia.

The annual revenue of the financial year 2017 amounted to 34,650,000 GBP and the target for the financial year 2018 is 39,200,000 GBP. The company’s vision is to become the leading and preferred inbound tour operator for Great Britain and Ireland (CEO Paul Maine, September 2017). As for the mission, Hotels and More offers “a one-stop-shop travel solution for coach tour operators, package tour operators, travel agents and direct sellers” (Hotels and More, 2017).

The company’s strategy is based on cooperation, stable relationships and partnerships in the travel industry. Hotels & More works with 700 travel companies (e.g. travel agencies and tour operators, herein referred to as clients) and over 2,300 suppliers and aims to expand and establish relationships with additional travel companies and governmental bodies. The goal of offering high quality tailor-made services is aimed to be reached through working hand in hand with partners (CEO Paul Maine, 2017).

An important aspect to consider for this project is the recent establishment of the holding company Tour Partner Group (TPG) which Hotels & More and three other travel companies are part of. The four destination management companies are sharing one source market – France – and have over 60 source markets in total. The goal of TPG overall is to expand the company’s portfolio and use sales synergies across all source markets in order to become increasingly profitable through mutual support. This establishment is in line with Hotels & More’s strategy of building stable relationships and working closely together with partner companies to become more successful, also cross-country.

Hotels & More’s current activities

For this project, as it will be elaborated afterwards, it is important to understand the basic promotional activities undertaken by Hotels & More. This knowledge is necessary in order to compare and give advice eventually. The current promotion tools used by the company will be found out during the first part of the research (qualitative) to get as much insight as possible. As mentioned before, promotion is done for all markets in a similar manner, therefore the interviews will give details about what exactly is done for the French market and how this differs or should differ. The outcome is necessary to keep in mind in order to implement a revised plan.

1.2 Reason for the project

This specific project addresses the Marketing and Sales department of Hotels & More with regards to the French source market. Hotels & More is currently offering similar products to all source markets. Marketing and promotion of products is done for all source markets nearly in the same way. This project focuses on promotion only, thus current products remain similar and the focus is on the way they are promoted, thus market penetration plays an important role.

Besides the forecast of increased inbound travelers to the UK overall (increase of 4,4% expected in 2018, VisitBritain, 2016), Hotels & More sees a significant opportunity to target the French market. more since the UK is the third most popular destination for French people in 2016 as retrieved from M. Devigne (personal communication, 2017), who is the French Sales Team Manager. According to her, France was the most important inbound source market for the UK volume and the 3rd for spend in 2016. Forecasts suggest there is great potential for growth in the number of visits to Britain in most years during the next decade. VisitBritain (2017) indicates as well that the French market was number one market in number of visits in 2016 with a number of 4.1 Mio. visits in total indicating an average year on year growth of 2% since 2003. France has been ranked number one market in visits since 2008 but is not top of the table with regards to spend and nights in the United Kingdom. This gives an indication that the products and services they buy vary from other markets. Especially in comparison to the USA and Germany who are ranked higher in spend and number of night stays. These findings motivate Hotels & More to find out how to address the French market and apply the most fitted promotional strategy in order to achieve better market reach and increase sales through adjusted communication. At the moment, the company is addressing all source markets at once, without a specific promotional plan targeted to each. This creates the opportunity for market penetration by means of a promotion plan applied to the French market.

As mentioned by Commercial Director Vera Lett (personal communication, 2017), the company has only recently started to produce brochures, the website and other marketing tools for the French market – however, the promotion is standardized for all source markets which does not make it as effective as it could be. In order to increase effectiveness, there is a need to evaluate and approach each source market differently. This can also have the positive effect of increased cost-effectiveness as money is not “wasted” on useless promotion. The French market is Hotels & More’s second biggest source market (9%) and is considered a market with the ability to grow much more when looking at recent developments. Vera Lett states that the goal is to increase market share to 25% by the end of 2019.

Moreover, as mentioned above, Hotels & More has recently become a member of the newly founded Holding company Tour Partner Group (TPG). One of Hotels & More’s sister companies – Irish Welcome Tours (IWT) located in Dublin – serves the French market as their biggest source market, but mainly to Ireland rather than the UK. This brings the opportunity for Hotels & More to learn from IWT’s approach and apply it to potential French customers coming to the UK. In the future, TPG aims to build expert hubs, i.e. Hotels & More as experts for the UK and IWT for Ireland, with offices in the destinations. This uniform approach and the division between French customers for IWT and Hotels & More benefits the company since they can solely focus on the specific target group and approach them in the most efficient way. Figure 1 in appendix 6.3.6 gives a clear overview of the relation within TPG.

The purpose of this project is to find out what Hotels & More needs to do in terms of promotion and communication to match the French market’s needs. This project will give advice on how to promote products in a more effective targeted way – which will allow Hotels & More to increase sales and develop stronger partnerships in the French speaking markets. Moreover, according to Vera Lett (personal communication, 2018), this approach could potentially be a lead example for other source market strategies. It can give useful insight into approaching a single market and the separate elements of the advice could be a suitable starting point for other markets. A positive side effect is the synergy with all sister companies as all are contributing to TPG’s overall results. Contracting Director Simon Roper (personal communication, 2018) pointed out that synergizing buying power is the most effective strategy to become successful. Not only is it in Hotels & More’s interest to improve the situation, but also in TPG’s as a whole. French business partners (clients) benefit from increased bookings from their end-customers.

1.3 The Management Problem
The Management problem of Hotels & More is that no individual promotional plan is applied to the French market. This can be seen as a challenge rather than a problem: even though it does not keep the business from being profitable, the challenge is to make it increasingly profitable. Using the same approach for all source markets, despite different requirements and needs, is the key issue. Market research (also with regards to products) has partly been done by M. Devigne, however the approach to the French market has not been adjusted. Hence the problem for Hotels & More is that there is no appropriate market penetration taking place as the focus for marketing lies on all markets in the same way. The business has the need to amend the promotional strategy in order to exploit its full potential. As indicated by M. Devigne (2017), the way offers are sent to clients has not been adjusted to what they want to receive; “offers are not attractive enough”. Another suitable example for lacking adjustments to the French market can be found in creating newsletters which do not have the right frequency and content for the French. Lacking knowledge about this market, which reduces sales as a consequence, is connected to this.

As a summary it can be said that the Management challenge of this project is the non-existent match between promotional activities and the French market’s needs and expectations. Hence the concrete product that will be produced within the advisory part is a promotion plan adapted to the French market.

1.4 Objectives of the advice and Management question
The objective of the advice is to establish a revised promotional plan in order to adjust and target French clients, increase sales and build long-term corporations as mentioned in the vision. This will be done through insight gained into the requirements and needs of the French market.

The Management question that will be answered in the advisory part of this project is as follows:

How can Hotels & More adjust their promotional plan in order to match the requirements and buying behavior of the French B2B market?

The relevant concepts of the management question are the promotional plan/promotion mix and the requirements of the French market. Hence this is also what the advice will result in. The theory is important to understand as a context and to base the advice upon. Deep insights into the concept of the French market needs to be gathered throughout the field research in order to be able to give advised tailored to the specific market.

1.5 Description and explanation of the information
In order to formulate the advice, information about the core concepts is needed. Firstly, relevant models and theories need to be analyzed in the theoretical framework to have basic context. The student unravels important models and understands the theory behind what will be created and give valid advice in form of a promotional plan.

Secondly, the needs and behavior of the French businesses and partners Hotels & More works with is needed which will be found out during the field research. It needs to be identified what stimulates and attracts them with regards to promotion since this is the core concept. Hence the main source to retrieve the information is the market itself. Another source of information can be the governmental organization of VisitBritain due to their knowledge about French travel behavior. Moreover, activities currently undertaken by Hotels & More are used as a basis (desk information) to create the interview guide. It is important to have access to current activities undertaken by Hotels & More in order to find out what needs to be improved and revised. This information is retrieved internally in form of interviews as well as own knowledge provided by the student. As a summary, the concept of promotional plan will be unraveled in the theoretical framework, whereas the requirements of the French market will be researched during field research.

The research objective is to gain deep insight into the needs and requirements of the French B2B market with regards to promotional activities in order to implement this knowledge into a revised promotional plan.

The resulting research questions that are going to be answered can be named as follows:

1. What are the requirements of the French market regarding promotion?
   1.1 How do French travel companies want to communicate?
      1.1.1 What is their most important communication channel?
      1.1.2 How important is direct marketing and personal selling?
      1.1.3 What is their preferred contact frequency with Hotels & More?
      1.1.4 How important is attendance at trade shows to them?
   1.2 What are French travel companies attracted to?
      1.2.1 What advertising is important to them?
      1.2.2 How frequent should promotion be?
      1.2.3 How important are sales promotions?
      1.2.4 What role does destination knowledge play?
   1.3 What is the buying behavior of the French market?
      1.3.1 When do they book?
      1.3.2 What are preferred products and services they buy?
      1.3.3 What are influence factors?

2. What is the current situation at Hotels & More in terms of promotion for the French market?
   2.1 What is done regarding the components of the promotional mix and what is relevant for the French?
   2.2 What are typical buying and culture characteristics of the French?
   2.3 What are current bottlenecks with regards to promotion and communication?

The first and main research question was established to get an insight into the needs and behavior of the French B2B source market. The sub-questions will be answered to look specifically into the communication, preferences, relations and buying behavior of the market. As shortly mentioned before, it is necessary to understand fully what the company is doing at the moment and what they think needs change. The outcome of research question 2 will then serve as the basis for the surveys handed out to clients to answer research question 1 more detailed.

1.6 Reading guide

After the introduction to this project, the next step is the main part of the project: the research. This section includes the theoretical framework with a detailed literature review in order to create a basis for the research and understanding the concept and relevant literature. The framework will be used to establish the survey and interviews based on the operationalization. Afterwards, the research methods used will be explained and justified. After the actual research – consisting of two parts – has taken place, the student will discuss the results, draw conclusions and reflect on the validity and reliability. The third part of the project is the advisory part; alternative solutions will be discussed and the student will reason her choice of option based on chosen criteria. After this, the implementation of the advice will be outlined before summarizing the outcome. The final part of the report will be the afterword which consists of a reflection of the day-to-day practice as well as the value of the thesis for the industry in general.

2. Research

The objective of the research section of this report is “to gain deep insight into the needs and requirements of the French B2B market with regards to promotional activities in order to implement this knowledge into a revised promotional plan”.

Research question 2 will take place in form of interviews and the outcome will be used as the basis for the surveys where the research question “What are the requirements of the French market regarding promotion?” should be answered. This being the main research question, sub-questions with regards to communication, relations, content preferences and buying behavior were established. These questions will be answered to meet the above mentioned objective. This second chapter of the report consists of the theoretical framework, an explanation of the research methods used, discussion of the results, conclusion and reflection of validity and reliability.

2.1 Theoretical framework

2.1.1 Search method

The following framework has been done to unravel and analyze the core concepts. The search engines used were Google, Google Scholar and Google Books. Resulting from the Management question “How can Hotels & More adjust their promotional plan in order to match the requirements and buying behavior of the French B2B market”, certain search terms were used to unravel the relevant concepts. The student used academic sources (books, case studies, journals) and a criteria for all information gathered was the language being English. The student based a lot of choices on relevant titles and the abstract/sub-header text which needed to be relevant. It was important to check whether the article or publication seems legit and appropriate for the research, e.g. if an author is named, date stated or the topic was discussable.

To ensure reliable framework results, the AAOCC criteria were applied. The model evaluates web articles with regards to authority (who is the author, is he/she qualified?), accuracy (is the information verifiable, specific and correctly written?), objectivity (is the information objective or does the author have an agenda?), currency (is the information up-to-date/still relevant?), and coverage (does the information cover the exact topic?). An example of applied AAOCC evaluation can be found in the appendix 6.2.

The research started off with searching for the term ‘promotion’ (highest number of hits) and was then broadened to ‘promotional plan’ as this was directly suggested by the search engine. During the research, the student found out that often the term was named ‘promotion plan’ which was then also searched for. Different sources name the concepts differently which was found out through suggestions of similar articles as references. These follow–up searches also lead to searching ‘promotion mix’ as this is the core of a promotional plan. This snowball method created the opportunity to find out more relevant information on the concept. Afterwards, as visible in the above advisory question, buying behavior plays an important role as well. Therefore, the student used the search term ‘business buying behavior’. One article largely based it on a certain process, so the term ‘business buying process’ was searched as well. Another example of the snowball method in this case is that the article included decision–making as well, so the student also used the expression ‘decision–making process’ in the literature research. During the search process, the student came across other useful sources such as appendix 6.3.4 which seemed relevant for the research as well. As referred to in many articles, the ‘product life cycle’ is very much relevant to this theory, therefore it was also searched for and unraveled. It became obvious that this model is not directly related to the core concept but gives important context to the promotion of a company.

2.1.2 Literature review
The literature review is executed to elaborate on the core concepts named above. The following sources were used:

- QuickMBA (2010). The Product Life Cycle
- Rajeck, J. (2017). The five key steps towards understanding the customer journey (and where most marketers are stuck)
- B. S. Pour, K. Nazari & M. Emami (2012). The effect of Marketing Mix in attracting customers: Case Study of Saderat Bank in Kermanshah Province
- F. E. Webster & Y. Wind (1972). The Journal of Marketing

Promotion
Lamb and Hair (2010) state that the goal of promotion is to inform, persuade and remind customers in order to increase or retain demand for a certain product. The authors stress that the exact of those three purposes depends on the stage in the product life cycle which will be illustrated later on. Promotion should inform “during the early stages of the product life cycle”, persuade in the growth stage and remind when the product finds itself in the maturity stage. Kotler (2008) states that “Promotion is not a single tool, but rather, a mix of several tools” (p. 424).

As mentioned by Mullin (2010), these tools are advertising, publicity (PR), direct marketing and sales promotion.

1. Advertising means “paid–for space” (Mullin, 2010) in print or online. Lamb and Hair (2010) describe advertising as “impersonal, one–way mass communication paid for by the source”.

The authors state that there is only little feedback from customers, a one-way direction of message flow, a high speed in reaching a large audience and not much message flexibility.

2. Public relations are connected to the image of a firm “carried by third parties” (Mullin, 2010). Mullin states that in case celebrities are involved in presenting the product or service, the positive effect can be very powerful. This tool is also impersonal, little feedback can be given and the message flow is one way.

3. As for direct marketing, it is important to stress that personal selling is part of direct marketing. This tool of the promotion mix consists of ways of promoting where customers can respond or react directly. Examples as mentioned by Mullin (2010) are personal presentations, direct calling or emailing from both sides, personal selling at exhibitions, merchandising and the new media. According to Lamb and Hair (2010), “the seller tries to initiate a purchase by informing and persuading (…)”. As an opposite to the other three tools, personal selling is a two-way message flow, a large amount of feedback can be given, it is tailored and the only face-to-face tool.

4. Closely connected to the reason of direct marketing as mentioned by Lamb and Hair, sales promotion “is the process of persuading a potential customer to buy the product (…) to boost sales – it is rarely suitable as a method of building long-term customer loyalty” (Jim Riley, n.d.). Sales promotions are incentives and special offers limited to a certain period of time and are used to stimulate immediate demand (Lamb & Hair, 2010). According to the authors, this tool is impersonal, little to moderate feedback can be given and it is the only rather short-term tool to be used.

A clear overview over the characteristics of the elements according to Lamb and Hair as elaborated above can be found in the appendix 6.4. The promotional mix is often referred to as “integrated marketing” (Mullin, 2010) because a balance is needed; hence a company needs to find out how to integrate the different tools of the promotion mix at once and what suits their services and products best. Lamb and Hair (2010) define “Integrated Marketing Communications (IMC)” as “the careful coordination of all promotional messages (…) for a product or service to assure the consistency of messages at every contact point (…)”.

In the seventh edition of Marketing Essentials by McDaniel, Lamb and Hair (2012), the authors state that public relations “strive to maintain a positive image (…) in the eyes of the public”. They describe publicity as being public information presented in the mass media which is used to create public acceptance and understanding. The authors distinguish four basic types of PR: product placement (the placement of products and services in magazines, books, videos, newspapers, internet etc.), consumer education (a company teaching potential buyers about their services and taking away uncertainties and lack of knowledge), sponsorships (“a company spends money to support an issue that is consistent with corporate objectives”) and internet websites (used to introduce new products, spread news, promote upcoming events and interact with customers). An important aspect mentioned by the authors is crisis management. They describe this as the “coordinated effort to handle the effects of unfavorable publicity (…)”. Companies need to respond quickly and truthfully and have an appropriate communication plan in place in order to act wise.

According to McDaniel et. al. (2012), sales promotions are divided into consumer sales promotions, targeting the end costumers, and trade sales promotions, targeting channel members such as retailers and wholesalers. It is elaborated as “short term incentive” and means either lowering a price or increasing a value of a product or service. Companies using sales promotions do not present a reason to buy, but rather a reward. The objective is to create immediate sales and types of sales promotions such as loyalty programs/bonus packs, distribution of samples, coupons or refunds.

The third tool of the promotional mix mentioned by McDaniel et. al. is personal selling. This is described as “a purchase situation involving a personal, paid-for communication between two people in an attempt to influence each other”. It includes a detailed explanation and/or demonstration of the product or service the seller intends to sell. Reactions are quick and concerns, comments and questions can be answered directly which creates fast communication flow. This tool is considered the most effective as costs can be regulated and effects might be bigger due to immediate reactions. Especially for high-value or tailor-made products, personal selling offers huge advantages.

Advertising is the most common tool used to promote a product or service. It is considered “any form of impersonal one-way communication” with the advantage of reaching a very large audience at once. Advertising can take place online, in magazines, billboards, transits, TV, radio, books etc. According to the authors, the internet becomes an increasingly used medium to place adverts.

The author Išoraitė (2016) says that promotion “helps to increase consumer awareness in terms of their products, leads to higher sales and helps to build brand loyalty”. Furthermore, she states that promotion within the marketing mix is a tool used to influence the buyer’s purchase decision. She includes the elements of advertising, personal selling, sales promotion, public relations and direct marketing in the mix and defines them as follows: advertising is the most common tool used and entails posters, displays, radio, TV and social media to “inform customers (...) and “help to reduce barriers between customers and organizations”. Different from Lamb and Hair, Išoraitė (2016) distinguishes between personal selling and direct marketing. She states that personal (or private) selling is a “personal communication to convince a potential buyer to purchase the (...) product or service”. She emphasizes that this kind of promotion is the most expensive one as it requires direct individual contact rather than targeting a broad audience. However, this tool is also the most effective one. The goal of personal selling is to inform, establish relationships and cause interests.

The author names direct marketing as a separate tool, however direct marketing also “involves direct communication”. Tools used herewith are mail order, phone order, catalogues or purchase through media by like/buy buttons. Another aspect of the promotion mix is sales promotion; these are “decisions which provide specific short-term measures, but to encourage the purchase, use, as well as by facilitating the purchase of goods”. Tools used are free samples, discounts, promotional items, allowances, loyalty schemes (event invitations). The final tool of the mix is public relations which the author states to have the goal of keeping a relationship with the public and develop more public interest to contribute to the confidence and reputation of a firm. Public relations can be improved by means of newsletters, articles, trade fairs, press conferences, attendance at events and word of mouth.

According to Pour, Nazari and Emami (2012) promotion “includes issues such as advertising, personal selling, sales promotion, public relations and direct marketing. Distribution channels are the most important questions about how an organization can optimize a connection between inner and outer channels”. The authors state that promotion is done in order to encourage customers to buy a certain product or service. Pour et. al. (2012) use the same tools of the mix as Išoraitė and mentions personal selling and direct marketing separately. The authors state that despite the fact of a quickly increasing use of internet, many businesses still do not pay a lot of money for online advertisements and promotions which should however be the case due to an increasing trend.

It becomes obvious that all authors named above state the same tools of the promotional mix with one difference: McDaniel, Lamb and Hair (both books) and Mullin use direct marketing and personal selling as one aspect while the other two divide it up into two different parts. Išoraitė also counts personal selling under direct marketing and this is why the student will focus on the four aspects of advertising, direct marketing, public relations and sales promotions. Išoraitė names suitable tools within the parts of the mix to be used for the operationalization at a later stage. All authors state the same goal of promotion while it is helpful to keep in mind the (dis)advantages and characteristics named by Lamb and Hair as well as the need of a balanced mix between all elements. What is surprising when looking at the definitions is that the aspect of public relations are described in a different way. While Mullin states that third parties are involved (often celebrities), Išoraitė refers to public relations being all contact to the public. Also McDaniel, Lamb and Hair (2012) explain public relations being the communication to the public and name an interesting aspect of crisis management. Furthermore, they distinguish the different elements into further sections which is useful as a basis for the interview guide. Due to the relevance and detailed insight for the client, the student will focus on the PR definition of McDaniel et. al. The student also uses direct marketing and personal selling in the same context. The operationalization of the promotion mix is based on the tools mentioned by McDaniel et. al., Lamb and Hair and Išoraitė since it is very detailed and clearly shows the different tools.

Business buying behavior and business buying process

Al-Jeshi, Al Ghamdi, Mira and Abdulqader (2012) define business buying behavior as the “behavior of the organizations that buy goods and services for use in the production of other products and services that are sold, rented, or supplied to others. It also includes the behavior of retailing and wholesaling firms that acquire goods for the purpose of reselling or renting them to others”. The following paragraph deals with the different types of buying situations and factors that influence the buying behavior of companies. According to Al-Jeshi et. al. (2012), the main factor that has an influence on the buying behavior of a firm is the environmental factor. Economic developments, political and competitive factors are crucial. Especially in international environments, the factor of culture can have large influence on buying behavior as well. Moreover, organizational factors (objectives, structure, systems) are a basic factor to consider in order to sell goods customized to the buyers' characteristics. Individual factors such as age, income and education add up to the mix of factors.

In order to thoroughly understand this term, it is important to define the business buying process; this is understood as the process through which firms decide what product/service to buy, find it, evaluate and choose among alternatives (Al-Jeshi et. al. (2012)). Jim Riley (n.d.) states that the process of decision–making is built up as follows: need recognition, information search, evaluation of alternatives, purchase and post–purchase evaluation. He states that this model “forces the marketer to consider the whole buying process rather than just the purchase decision”.

In the stage of need recognition (also called problem awareness) the buyer recognizes the need or reacts upon a stimulus, created through promotional activities. The search for information can have different sources, such as personal, commercial or public. Riley stresses that “the challenge for the marketing team is to identify which information sources are most influential in their target markets”. In the stage of evaluation, it needs to be distinguished between high and low involvement in the decision–making. High–involvement decisions, a lot of information needs to be provided to the buyer since it usually involves higher risks and expenditure. Low involvement has a rather simple evaluation and less information is needed. The final stage of post-purchase evaluation; in order to prevent buyer from regretting a decision, the business needs to convince the customer that the offered service will satisfy the needs in the long term.

Webster and Wind (1972) state that variables influencing the business buying behavior are social, individual, environmental and organizational. Environmental factors are described as being physical, legal, technological, political, economic and cultural. The authors point out that considering environmental factors is crucial when intending to target a specific customer group. These factors are often overlooked and should be the basis of the approach. Organizational influences derive from influences a firm has on an individual, such as human resources, finances, rules, structure or goals. Finally, end-decisions will always be made by one individual which is why the authors stress that businesses should not only focus on the group as a whole, but also on individuals within that organization. Personality, role and motivation influence each individual to a large extent which takes place in the final stage of the decision-making process. As a summary, Webster & Wind say that the first major influence of decision-making when contemplating buying lays in the environment of the organization. This is then narrowed down to the organization itself which has its own characteristics influencing the buying behavior. Finally, as the last influence is the individual and social aspect important to consider as the final decision always lays in the hands of a certain individual. Webster and Wind already implement the influences in the decision-making process and indicate that it is a “complex organizational buying process” before final decisions are made.

Both articles elaborated above entail the same factors that influence buying behavior. Al-Jeshi et. al. (2012) specifically explain the different stages of the process and what happens in which state whereas Webster and Wind (1972) focus more on the influences itself and adds the social factor to it. Webster and Wind clearly indicate how the process is narrowed done to individuals eventually. Both sources state detailed influence factors and use a similar approach which is why the student mixes both for the operationalization (appendix 6.3.2), considering the environmental influence as the main one.

With regards to the decision making process, McDaniel, Lamb and Hair (2012) elaborate on the different steps as follows: need recognition is “an imbalance between actual and desired state” which is recognized by either and internal or external stimulus. The authors state that advertising and sales promotions often provide the stimulus because it makes buyers recognize a need (they sometimes did not know existed). The second step of information search can also be internal or external; internal search for information means bringing back information stored in the memory, such as previous experiences or sights. External information search “seeks information in the outside environment” which can be marketing controlled or non-marketing controlled (such as personal experience). Afterwards, an evaluation of alternatives and the purchase takes place. This includes setting up criteria on which decisions are based, such as price, features, value or importance. Hence potential buyers are “examining alternative advantages and disadvantages along important product attributes” before the purchase takes place. The final step of the chain is post-purchase behavior; this sub-process consists of either satisfaction by the buyer, or so-called “cognitive dissonance”. The latter is a tension felt by the buyer when a product or service does not turn out as expected. In order to make the buyer satisfied after all, the marketer needs to use effective communication. Post-purchase letters, guarantees, superiority advertisements or responses from customer service can reduce cognitive dissonance.

Another relevant model to unravel the buying process is figure 6.3.4. (appendix) by J. Rajack (2017). The author emphasizes the importance of understanding the customer journey (which in this case are business buyers). His model consists of six steps including awareness, interest, consideration, purchase, retention and advocacy. A company must know in which phase of the journey they are and which tools play an important role. This is a helpful model to find out what can influence buyers in which stage and how decision making is related to the customer journey.

When looking at the specific steps of decision making and buying behavior, it can be said that McDaniel et. al. and Riley both elaborate on the same steps that are taken during the process. This is why the student will focus on the steps of need recognition, search for information, evaluation of alternatives, purchase and post-purchase behavior. Riley describes the steps in more detail which can be compared with Rajack’s model. Rajack describes a six-step process which differs slightly from the other author’s models. However, the stage of awareness equals “problem recognition”, the stages of interest and consideration equals “evaluation of alternatives” and “search for information” while retention and advocacy could be considered “post-purchase behavior”. Due to the close similarities, the different mentioned tools will be included in the operationalization (appendix 6.3.3).

Product life cycle
As shortly addressed above, the goal of promotion depends on where a product or service is situated within the product life cycle. QuickMBA (2010) explains the different stages of the cycle with regards to promotions. In the introduction phase, raising awareness is key and businesses intend to educate potential buyers about their product/service. In the growth stage “the firm seeks to build brand preference and increase market share” and promotions can be targeted to a larger audience in order to grow. As also mentioned by Lamb and Hair (2010), promotion should persuade in this stage. It is followed by the maturity stage which focusses on product differentiation and according to Lamb and Hair should “remind” the buyers of the product. The final stage is the decline stage where decisions need to be made about maintaining, harvesting or discontinuing the product or service. This model was chosen since it is closely connected to Lamb and Hair’s statements and illustrates which purpose promotion has in which stage. This is why the student has chosen to operationalize this model in combination with Lamb and Hair’s statements (appendix 6.3.5). However, as it is already clear that the company intends to grow and expand, it is not used as a basis for the interviews.

The above concepts and models are closely related to each other. Firstly, one needs to understand what promotion entails and most importantly what the promotion mix/plan consists of and how these are connected. This core concept is the basis of the project and will be the revised product outcome in the advisory part. It is crucial to understand the various components before a company decides how to mix and make use of it. Context is needed in order to understand the “surroundings” of doing promotion. The student needs to understand what business buying behavior entails and what the different steps of the process are. Once a company understands this behavior, they can find out where to interfere and what is important to consider. Especially the mentioned influences need to be kept in mind. The model of customer journey gives relevant context into where a company stands and what tools can be used and the product life cycle illustrates clearly what exactly the goal of the promotion should be which a company should work towards to.

2.2 Research method
The overview of the research questions that will be answered can be found on page 11. These questions were established with the research objective to gain deep insight into the requirements and needs of the French market, specifically with regards to promotion. The relevant concepts were defined and elaborated in the theoretical framework. Moreover, it is helpful to understand what Hotels & More is currently doing in terms of promotion and communication with the French source market. When these questions are answered by answering the research question 2, a starting point is given and the second part of the research can be based on the outcome. To shortly summarize the approach, it can be said that the research of this project will go two–tracked as elaborated in this chapter, with a conclusion of both outcomes.

2.2.1 Research strategy, data collection method & sampling plan
The chosen research strategy for this project is divided into two. This chapter will explain the two different research strategies including their data collection method, sampling plan and data analysis method to ensure a clear picture of the two separately. The reason for choosing two different strategies will be explained in the sections respectively.

Qualitative research strategy – research question two
The first strategy chosen for this project is qualitative. The reason for choosing this method is that interviews with experts in the field can give deep insight into the topic in order to improve the end result. Brotherton (2008) names qualitative research as being the “why” research, thus it is explanatory rather than descriptive. It is used to retrieve in–depth information about certain opinions, views and feelings (Verhoeven, 2011). Factual statements can be made through quantitative research while interviews with experts can highly contribute to the outcome and give more detailed insight and reasons. As the student also intends to find out about the current situation, French market experts are being approached. Also deriving from the operationalization, interviews intend to produce results that give detailed views and perceptions on the topic rather than summarized numeric statements. Kelle (2006) mentions that “results from qualitative interviews can help to identify unobserved heterogeneity in quantitative data (...)”. Hence even though answers in surveys can vary and the reason is unknown, experts can explain overall differences or characteristics as they deal with the sample as a whole. The author also states that “qualitative research can be used to drill deep holes into the field yielding the information necessary for in–depth explanations”. The initial reason for choosing this strategy is that interviews offer the opportunity of digging into a topic through follow–up questions and clarifications whereas surveys are not able to provide that option. This strategy was chosen to answer research question 2 to assess the current situation and use it as a basis for the survey which can then be more targeted to the audience.

The chosen data collection method is individual interviews with selected interviewees. These one–to–one interviews will be recorded (after permission) and transcribed to ensure a valid record. In order to reach the interviewees, the student will make use of relations within Hotels & More (internal staff involved with the French market) as well as sister companies. The respondents could be approached personally within the company or via email or phone. It is important to point out that these interviews will be held in English and can take place in person or over the phone or Skype since respondents might be located in different countries.

The sampling plan of this strategy varies from the quantitative sampling plan. Interviews will be held with experts of the field, such as Hotels & More’s Commercial Director, the French sales manager and sister companies’ market managers. The student set the criteria of being actively and frequently involved in the French market business. Thus non-probability sampling is used, the selection of participants is not random and not all units have the same chance of being selected. Interviews are held with experts, so the method can be seen as purposive sampling (Verhoeven, 2011) since a certain criteria is set. The population as a whole is all parties involved in dealing with the French market (e.g. French sales team or CEO), while the chosen experts represent the sample itself.

After the data has been collected it needs to be analyzed. A transcript of each interview has to be written down, according to the recordings made. The next step is the coding which consists of two different kinds: open and axial coding. Firstly, the interviews need to be coded openly which means various fragments of the interviews need to be summarized. The student will label certain parts according to what was stated and write down a certain meaning/result/understanding. Open coding is based on what conclusions the student draws from the interviewee’s statement. The different topics are categorized. Afterwards, axial coding is executed; based on the previous open coding, the student now establishes relationships among those codes. By taking into account different open codes, conclusions can be drawn by setting up axial codes. After executing these two codings, the data is analyzed and specific conclusions can be made as illustrated in the code tree. These outcomes will serve as the basis for the survey sent out to clients. The reason for this is that this approach can help create more detailed survey questions rather than starting from scratch without basic information. A positive consequence is a more specific outcome and answer to the main research question. Moreover, these results can be compared to the results of the quantitative research which can bring up differences as well as support each other.

Quantitative research strategy – research question one

Quantitative research is used to describe a “factual picture” (Brotherton, 2008), for example for statistics. It is also referred to as being descriptive rather than explaining. In this case, this strategy was chosen as a lot of data is needed during the field research. This specific strategy will be used for the field research conducted with the French market, namely Hotels & More’s clients themselves. Originally, the student intended to execute qualitative research only. However, language would be a barrier and there would be no possibility to go in-depth, ask follow-up questions aimed at finding out more details about the subject. Hence this strategy is used to get a rather broad picture of the market and their requirements with regards to promotion. According to Kelle (2006), “quantitative methods can give an overview about the domain under study and can describe its heterogeneity on a macro-level whereas qualitative methods can be used to gain access to local knowledge of the field (…)”. The author states that quantitative research is based on facts and can explain what a certain population thinks whereas qualitative research rather explains the why by going into depth.

The chosen data collection method for this strategy will be a survey based on the outcome of the expert interviews. Verhoeven (2011) mentions that this is “the most frequently used method for measuring the opinions, views, attitudes and knowledge of a large group (…)”. In this case, as much data as possible needs to be collected and the French market’s attitudes and opinions should be analyzed. As mentioned by Commercial Director Vera Lett (2018), French clients tend to expect documents in French and the survey therefore needs to be translated beforehand. The student will have access to contacts and can send out the surveys, e.g. through Qualtrics provided by Saxion. Alternatively, it is possible to reach out to the market by email, either private or Hotels & More (also by means of a newsletter). It is possible that follow-up or clarification is needed for clients to fill out the survey correctly, therefore the student or supporting French speakers should be available at all times. The student will make use of all client data there is available in order to be able to reach a larger number. In this case, the student has access to approximately 700 businesses overall. This is one of the biggest advantages of this method: a large number of respondents can be reached in little time. Furthermore, there are no travel costs or other financial implications.

The sampling plan includes French travel agencies and coach operators as a whole which resembles the population. The entire French market can generally be the population of this research, whereas the student solely focuses on Hotels & More’s active clients. Thus these selected clients are the sample for this project. The student keeps the number of approachable clients unlimited as this contributes to the validity of the outcome – the more responses the more generalizable is the result (Verhoeven, 2011). According to Brotherton (2008), the sample should reflect the population’s characteristics. All parties of the sample have the same chance of being selected for the research. Sampling can be probable and non-probable. In this case probability sampling is used (simple random sampling). A certain sampling frame (database of clients) is available. All of these clients generally have the same chance of being selected (Verhoeven, 2011). The only criteria that could be applied is the frequency of contact the client has with Hotels & More (involvement in the business). This would contribute to the chance of fast responses but would also limit the potential amount of responses overall. Therefore, the student chooses to keep it unlimited. The chosen data analysis method is the report tool of Saxion Qualtrics as this gives clear overviews over the results. The student choose not to use the SPSS system as a comparison of two variables is not applicable. The reports that Qualtrics exports include helpful graphs and statements in percentages which is suitable to state outcomes for this project. Another advantage of the system is time and cost efficiency.

Summary of both strategies

Initially, the student has considered qualitative research only due to the detailed insight that can be retrieved. However, as mentioned above, due to the language barrier the intended insight cannot be provided. After consulting with examiners, the student decided to use both strategies combined to reach the intended outcome. The expert interviews can give relevant information about the current situation and already present point of views about characteristics or bottlenecks. With the help of follow-up questions, the insight gained can be very detailed. The results of the coding will then be used to set up the surveys, as directed to the market as possible and based on the operationlizations. This will contribute to an outcome that is more specific and very much directed to the main research question and sub-questions (RQ 1). Due to the language barrier, surveys will need to be translated. The combination of these two research strategies offers a more valid outcome directed to the research questions as the surveys are not established “from scratch” but based on the current situation and existing opinions. Furthermore as shortly mentioned before, results of both strategies can be compared and differences and similarities can be spotted. As these two researches do not take place at the same time, it can become time consuming. Therefore, the student needs to manage time efficiently. The interview guide based on the operationalizations can be found in appendix 6.6.
2.3 Research
A transcript of all five interviews (6.7) can be found in the appendix. The interviews have been given numbers to ensure a clear overview over what has been found in which interview. The code tree (6.8.) is similar to the set–up of the interview guide as this was established based on the operationalization of the promotional mix dealing with the different components. The survey can be found in appendix 6.9. After the survey was translated into French, it was sent out to around 700 French–speaking clients via Word mailing to be able to send it via the student’s Hotels & More email address. The survey system used was Saxion Qualtrics which is a flexible and easy tool to use. The student set herself a time frame of one week for respondents to answer after which 55 respondents (ca. 8%) had filled out the survey. The report by Saxion Qualtrics can be found in appendix 6.10. The following section deals with the discussion/findings of both researches and an overall conclusion of the results including answers to the research questions as well as the discussion of validity and reliability.

2.3.1 Discussion of qualitative results
The information that was collected during the interviews was divided into the following topics/codes: purchased products, advertising, destination knowledge, personal selling, buying behavior, influencing factors, other characteristcs and bottlenecks. These aspects will be discussed in this paragraph.

Purchased products
With regards to the products French clients are interested in, it becomes obvious that food is a key component that is important and needs focus during their tours. Marie Laure, Vera, Melody and Marie B. agreed on the high importance of good food during the travels and that clients expect a certain standard (4.42–43: “Yeah, food is very important. So basically all the programmes, I mean for the guaranteed departures, all the programmes are basically on full board.”, 3.49: “The only thing they could complain of is the food. Very important.”). Melody added to this that often times, the French are not properly informed about the British food standard and therefore disappointed. Melody stated that contracts should include a note about the food in order to prevent misunderstanding with regards to catering. Marie Laure pointed out that French like to take their time for food and that it is more important to seniors what kind of food they are provided with than for workers. This leads to the differentiation between seniors and workers and what kind of products they buy. Location appears to be more relevant to workers than to seniors as they want to undertake more activities with easy accessibility. Marie B. also stated that the younger people tend to have more activities. Marie Laure mentioned that seniors tend to have less activities, hence the higher importance of a good hotel. Vera, Melody and Anais agreed on London being the most popular destination for the French. It is seen as easily accessible and suitable for shorter trips which are the most common (2.79: “(...) when you speak to someone about England, the first thing that comes up is London”, 5.236: “(...) Frenchies love London, they love it (...)”, 5.242: “That’s the main thing, like the main destination they think about when we talk about Great Britain, definitely.”). Activities such as Madame Tussaud’s or Harry Potter tours – fun activities – are popular and considered exciting, just like London itself. Due to the location, Canterbury is quite popular as well while other cities in the UK, such as Liverpool are less sold. Anais stated that Liverpool is known for the Beatles, but a less popular destination. She pointed out that end-clients often have “not heard about a destination” (5.253) which is why they will not be interested in anything else other than the known. While Anais mentioned Ireland as being less popular, Marie B. pointed out that the Connemara region is very popular due to a song well–known in France, and that Dublin is mostly part of any tour despite its high prices. Furthermore, Marie Laure stated that the products clients are interested in vary between travel agencies and coach operators: travel agencies want to buy what’s new, follow newest trends and provide exciting and original tours while coach operators rather stick to traditional tours.

Advertising

This component of the promotional mix shows that French people are watching the news very frequently and receptive to what is shown on TV. Marie Laure, Vera and Melody strongly agree on this impression. Marie B. added that people discuss a lot about what is shown on TV. (3.230: “TV has always been a big thing. I think it’s like a routine (...), 4.133–134: “(...) something like seven or eight in the evening most of the time people are in front of the TV.”)

Moreover, it became obvious that print material is generally very relevant in France. Melody addressed the popularity of “People Magazines” (3.224) in France and how famous the Royal Family is. She stated that French people are very much into what is happening with the Royals (3.209–210: “And you will always see the Royal Family in these magazines. And I think they’re quite interested by it, fascinated in a way (...”)”). Also regarding print material, Anais said that the printed brochure is very helpful to present the company and their products. Clients prefer to have a physical brochure over an online one. Connected to this, Vera stated that it is important to have something in print (2.58–59: “We feel that it’s important for market to have something print”).

With regards to newsletters and social media, Marie Laure mentioned that clients gave the feedback that newsletters should not be sent out too often, clients do not want to be pushed. Marie Laure also provided a newsletter of a travel magazine in which Hotels & More was mentioned, showing social media activity. According to both Anais and Marie B. social media is currently less popular, but generally increasing which is why (Anais) it should be pushed and mentioned more frequently.

Regarding advertising, Marie B. explained that Tourism Ireland has an outsourced office based in France which is actively promoting the destination on TV, adverts in subways and communicate well about recent developments. Anais mentioned “Les pages jaunes” (equivalent to yellow pages) as the initial starting point for looking for potential partners where adverts are also shown.

Destination knowledge

As shortly stated above, Marie Laure indicated that there is a difference between travel agencies and coach operators. While she sees travel agencies as knowledgeable about destinations, coach operators often lack this knowledge as they are no destination experts. With regards to lacking information, Vera stated that the UK is mainly connected to London, hence other destinations need to be brought closer. Anais also agreed that it is necessary to inform about other destinations and convince agencies to sell those. Referring to the first aspect of the discussion, most interviewees agreed on the lack of knowledge about food. According to Anais, a few clients do have questions about a certain destination due to lacking knowledge and she indicated she is providing help where she can as Hotels & More is a destination expert. She added that she had a few requests for presentations in the past.

Personal selling

All interviewees agreed on meetings and personal visits being the most important aspect. In order to build good and stable relationships, frequent contact is needed as mentioned by Vera. According to her, good relationships can result in increased bookings, so contact at least 1–2 times a month is crucial (2.108). Also Marie Laure outlined her experience with clients saying they never worked with certain companies if they have never met them and she mentioned that clients need a French contact person to turn to and to have a stable partnership with. As retrieved from Marie B., Irish Welcome Tours intends to go to France for a sales trip at least once a month, to visit potential clients as well as historical clients to check in. Agreeing with this, Anais usually goes on sales trips for a full week once a month which she considers as crucial and basis of any potential business. With regards to trade shows, Marie Laure, Vera and Anais agreed on the importance on being there and showing face. Top Resa was mentioned by all as the most relevant trade fair which is four days yearly in September and located in Paris (5.107: "We think that Top Resa is the main one and we have to be there (...)", 2.97–98: "I think it’s important to be there. But I mean there is only one, I mean for us which is really relevant in France, which is Top Resa (...)"). French clients usually do not book appointments but will rather stop by spontaneously, according to all three interviewees. Moreover, presentations held by Hotels & More staff are not done at the moment but Anais indicated that support for bigger clients when presenting to associations could be considered. As shortly mentioned before, clients approached her previously about presentations to sell better. As for the way and frequency of communication, Marie Laure said that phone calls are preferred as they are quicker and easier while it should be kept in mind not to be too "pushy" and chasing.

Buying behavior

Overall, high price sensitivity and competitiveness was mentioned by almost all interviewees. They agreed on being very price sensitive while wanting good quality (1.306: “rates are very important, definitely”; 3.179: “They want to pay less and have better quality to be honest with you. It’s hard.”, 3.182–183: “(...) price sensitive. (...) It’s tough sometimes”, 5.185: “They’re really price sensitive.”). Anais mentioned the low margin since French people tend to buy cheap products. It was mentioned that they would even choose cheaper incomings over longer partnerships when it comes to prices. Furthermore, the time of booking was uniform in statements of all interviewees. French clients tend to book late, sometimes last minute which – according to her – could be connected to pricing or risks (related to political happenings). As for Ireland – according to Marie B. – the French provide more budget than Germans and Spanish and also at IWT, last minute bookings are quite common, especially due to advertisement online or on social media. The price sensitivity was stated to be closely connected to the high competitiveness: as indicated by Marie Laure, French clients are sensitive towards the issue of working with competitors. Hence some clients might not collaborate due to partnerships with competitors (1.217: “If you are working with their competitors, they are not working with you.”).

Influencing factors

The two main issues addressed during the interviews are politics and media. All Hotels & More interviewees named the example of the French president encouraging French people not to travel due to political happenings. It turned out to have a huge influence on the people and as a consequence on bookings. Marie Laure emphasized that people are (generalizing) believing anything the government states and what is shown on the media. Closely relating to this, another factors largely influencing the travel behavior is the media. All interviewees considered the French to be very receptive to what is shown on TV and in newspapers. The media is pushing a lot of negative events while they are shown more factual in other countries. Melody, Marie B. and Marie Laure all mentioned the news most people watch and talk about (1.464: "(...) the French media are very, very bad, really, to be frank", 3.129: “The press has an immense, big, big influence.”).

Other influence factors as named by Vera could be the weather or general stereotypes, while Marie B. said the French generally have quite a positive stereotype of Ireland due to safety and the easy accessibility.

2.3.2 Discussion of quantitative results

The survey was divided into various aspects based on the outcome of the interviews. The different sections were general information, products and destination, communication, media and comments which will be discussed in this section. Please note: percentages are rounded up and off.

General information

As seen in the report by Qualtrics, the main location of respondents is South of France, closely followed by the region around Paris as well as Eastern France. Most (57%) of all respondents are travel agencies, 10% coach operators and 33% stated “other”, such as MICE agencies, tour operators, associations and autocaristes which are coach operators. With regards to their end-clients, it became obvious that workers and seniors are equal, both reaching 37%. When looking at indications at “other”, many named scholars as the clients they handle.

Products and destination

Regarding products and destinations they sell, multiple answers were possible. Ireland reached 31% closely followed by only London (27%). Scotland followed with 19%, England with 18% and Wales with 5%. It is important to note that London was given as an “only” option, so 27% of all clients sell London only. Many respondents indicated example spots they sell and it became clear that in all countries, bigger cities are sold. For England, Oxford, Bath, London and Brighton were named. For Ireland, only Dublin, Galway and round tours with no specifications were named while for Scotland they indicated Edinburgh, Highlands and round tours. Wales was specified into Cardiff, the capital, as well.

Next, the student looked into the duration of usually sold tours. The usual duration turned out to be 2–4 days (49%) and 5–8 days (39%) while 1 day (6%) and 8 or more days (6%) are less common.

Concerning the kind of tours clients mainly sell, it was found out that city trips (33%) and round tours (31%) are the most common. Cultural tours followed with 19%, historical tours with 7%, active tours with 5% and culinary tours with 3%. Respondents named others such as workshops/sports events.

In the statement section it was found out that most clients find good food very important (63% strongly agree and 24% somewhat agree). Moreover, the importance of including general sightseeing activities was agreed on with 55%. Including fun activities in the tours turned out to be seen as neutral. Clients strongly agree (43%) that a central location of the hotel is crucial and it became clear that a good quality of the hotel is important as well (51% somewhat agree, 40% strongly agree).

Regarding destination knowledge, the statistic states that 67% of clients gave themselves a score of 1–6, 31% 7–8 and 2% 9–10. Détracteur indicates a score of less than 6, passif means 7–8 and promoteur 9–10, according to Taylor (2017). As for the question whether clients would like to know more about the UK and Ireland, the majority (71%) said yes, 25% maybe and 4% declined. Furthermore, clients agreed on wanting to learn more about other attractions and spots in the UK and Ireland (67% yes, 22% maybe, 12% no).
Communication

The following elaborations are partly supported by visuals to ensure a clear overview. Concerning the communication, it was found out that 51% somewhat agree and 22% strongly agree on the important of meeting their business partner in person. Also, it became obvious that 51% find it somewhat important to be present at trade shows, while 18% strongly agree to this. When it comes to preferring phone contact over email contact, most clients (31%) were neutral and 28% somewhat disagreed and 20% strongly disagreed. A similar pattern was found in the statement of wanting to be reminded/contacted at least once a month: 39% somewhat disagreed, 25% strongly disagreed and 24% were neutral.

Meeting business partners seems to be varying quite a lot: to 24% it is not important at all, 27% would like to meet 4–5 per year and 4% twice a month or every two months. The majority of clients responded with other, such as: once a year – indicated by almost all of them, twice per year and only when necessary. Personal contact should only happen when necessary as voted for by 76% while 12% voted for once a month, 8% for every few weeks, 2% daily and one respondent indicated “via mail about events and destination”.

55% of all agreed on the interest in Hotels & More holding presentations about the destination and/or products for clients and end–clients. As for this question, 39% said maybe and 6% denied. Concerning newsletters that are sent out, it became obvious that interesting facts about the destination (23%) and original, exciting tours (20%) are the most attractive to be included. Informative content (14%), traditional tours (12%) and business/personal news as well as attractive design (9%) followed the lead.
Updates on political events (5%) and interactive tools (6%) turned out to be less crucial for clients. One other was named (“name of the hotel”).

When looking at the result of the statements, it is visible that 43% somewhat agree on the brochure being helpful while 37% are neutral. Moreover, 65% are neutral with regards to interesting content and relevance of the newsletter, whereas 33% somewhat agree that it is the case. 40% somewhat agree that they would like to receive the newsletter every two weeks or less while 28% are neutral with regards to this. 61% of respondents are regular travel magazines readers, but most of them (36%) stay neutral with regards to print being more important than online presence. Also, most respondents (45%) stay neutral about their online presence on social media or online magazines while 27% somewhat agree that it is important. 43% somewhat agree that TV advertisements influence them or their clients in buying products and/or looking into new trends and ideas. 29% stated to be neutral while 16% strongly agreed on this. Public posters seem to be relevant for clients as 47% somewhat agreed on the influence they can have and 10% strongly agreed, whereas 29% were neutral. As for merchandise, such as calendars and pens, 41% were neutral, 29% somewhat agreed and 12% strongly agreed.

Media

The majority (41%) of French-speaking clients somewhat agree on being informed about political happenings in the UK and Ireland while 25% stay neutral and there is almost an equality between strongly agreeing clients (16%) and somewhat disagreeing clients (14%). In case of negative events, 45% strongly agree and 31% somewhat agree that they can contact the incoming agency and learn more about the situation. With regards to the influence of media in their country, it became visible that 57% strongly agreed and 33% somewhat agreed on this while 4% were neutral and 4% disagreed. 41% strongly agree and 37% somewhat agree that stereotypes play an important role in the country, whereas 8% somewhat disagreed and 2% strongly disagreed.

Comments

A comment and remark section was included to be able to receive any feedback that comes up for the respondents. As stated in the report, this included the following comments: interesting photos about the destination and include information about with public transport, include more original tours (already know the classic activities and sights, but would like to know more about niche), a specific section or information about events in the UK and Ireland, restaurants were “old-school” and not central which should be improved especially for senior clients who go on cultural tours.
2.3.3 Conclusion

This paragraph includes a conclusion where research question 1 and 2 including the sub-questions will be answered. The results stem from both research strategies combined. This way results can be more specific and findings can be compared.

Firstly, the research question “What is the current situation at Hotels & More currently in terms of promotion for the French market?” will be answered, for the sub-questions respectively.

What is done regarding the components of the promotional mix and what is relevant for the French?

During the qualitative research, it became clear that print material is a necessary component in terms of promoting the companies’ services and products in the French market. Hotels & More is producing a printed brochure which is preferred over the online version. Closely relating to this, it became obvious that magazines are largely in use in France and clients could be approached via this channel as well. Also during the quantitative research, it was found out that French people are interested in reading magazines. The majority (61%) read travel magazines regularly which can be crucial for print advertisement. Hence the brochure that is being produced at Hotels & More is also relevant for the French, or print ads in general. This was also emphasized in the survey result with 43% somewhat agreeing to this.

In addition, another strong point is TV advertisement. From desk research, the student found out that for the German market, Hotels & More is collaborating with broadcasters who promote Hotels & More’s services and products. According to the interviewees, French people seem to be very receptive to what is shown on TV and are frequent and active TV watchers. This outcome can also be found in the interviews: 43% agreed somewhat and 16% strongly agreed to being influenced by TV advertisement. A less popular component at the moment is social media and general online activity of the French market, such as newsletters or online presence. During qualitative research, it was found out that not a large number of clients are represented and active online. As seen in the survey report, French clients stay quite neutral with regards to social media while 27% somewhat agree to the importance. Therefore, social media has less relevance for the French at the moment. However, social media is generally increasing and the need to be more active was mentioned in the interviews.

With regards to newsletters, interviewees named the fact that it should not be sent out too often and generally not be pushed too much. This was also found during quantitative research: 40% somewhat agreed that they would like to receive the Hotels & More newsletter every two weeks or less. From the student’s own experience, it was found out that newsletter used to be sent out weekly. After feedback from clients, it was reduced which is supported by the research.

Another important factor with regards to advertising are tourism boards. During the interviews, it turned out they appear to be suitable for appropriate communication and active advertisements in public for a certain destination. At the moment, Hotels & More collaborates with VisitBritain, the British Tourist Board, promoting the destination, but is not involved in working with partners based in France. With regards to personal selling and direct marketing, the most important aspect mentioned by the interviewees were meetings in person and sales trips. These visits seem to be crucial and serve as the basis for a stable relationship. The survey showed that most respondents think meetings should only take place when necessary or once a year, as mentioned by most. Frequent contact (1–2 times a month) and meetings in person are necessary to establish good partnerships and thus increase bookings potentially, as mentioned in the interviews. It was mentioned a few times that not only potential businesses should be visited, but also long-term clients. As a slight contrast, quantitative research showed that they only want to be contacted when necessary (39% somewhat agreed, 25% strongly agreed). Both research methods showed that French clients are in need of a French contact person they can always refer to.

Furthermore, trade shows appear to be one-sided as Top Resa in Paris is the only relevant trade show for Hotels & More which is attended yearly. Clients do not usually book appointments in advance but stop by and like to have small talk, or business talk with attendants. The interviewees agreed on the importance of being present at this trade show. Quantitative results support this: more than half of all clients find it important (51%) and 18% very important to be at trade shows. As for presentations held for clients or end-clients, they are not done at the moment, but some clients seem to show interest in such presentations about the products and services they consider to buy from Hotels & More. Not only interviewees pointed out the interest, but the results of the survey indicated that the majority (55%) of respondents would be interested in Hotels & More holding presentations to sell products.

What are typical buying and culture characteristics of the French?
As retrieved from the interviews, it can be concluded that French clients put a lot of emphasis on good food during their tours. They expect a certain standard and need to be properly informed beforehand. The survey supports this: most clients find good food very important (63% strongly agree and 24% somewhat agree).

Moreover, London is seen as the most popular and most known destination for the French, closely connected to the easy accessibility and the news about the Royal Family. Canterbury is also booked, while most other cities or destinations in the UK are lesser known and therefore often times not considered by clients nor end-clients. Connected to this, the survey revealed that only London (27%) is among the top three destinations sold. Unlike seen in the interviews, it was found out that Ireland (31%) is generally a popular destination for French partners. The interviews revealed that Connemara is very popular and Dublin is usually part of every tour. City trips to London, Dublin and Edinburgh were mentioned in both researches. Activities and location of hotels vary depending on whether the travelers are seniors or workers. Trips are generally short, often city trips are booked while longer round tours are less popular, as mentioned in the interviews. However, the survey showed that next to 2–4 day tours, 5–8 day tours are also popular, while shorter and longer trips are less common.

As for the products, interviewees stated that travel agencies want to follow new and exciting trends and offer original tours while coach operators rather stay traditional and simple which was said to be connected to their level of destination knowledge. Results about classical sightseeing stayed rather one-sided. Also the location and high food quality turned out to be important which does not indicate a major difference among clients. As for destination knowledge, the majority (67%) scored little knowledge which does not support the knowledge provided by travel agencies, as mentioned during the interviews, where it was said that agencies often know a lot about the destination they offer while coach operators sometimes lack knowledge. However, 71% indicated that they would like to know more about the UK and Ireland and 67% said they want to learn more about other attractions and spots in the UK and Ireland.

Also it can be concluded that French clients are very sensitive to price and competition. All interviewees agreed on the high price sensitivity with low margin while requesting higher quality which can be a challenge. Clients tend to also react on working with competition which for them can be a reason not to collaborate. Due to sensitivity, this was not addressed in the survey.
In addition, they generally book late, at times last-minute. Almost all interviewees agreed on often last-minute bookings or generally bookings for close dates. Especially compared to other markets such as Germany, their booking point in time is late and can therefore become a challenge for the sales and contracting team.

As found out during the interviews, media is an influencing factor for the French. They seem to be very receptive to what is shown in the media and rely on the government and public statements (political influence). The media seems to be pushing negative events rather than presenting it neutrally as mentioned by multiple interviewees. The results of the survey support the outcome of the interviews: 57% strongly agreed and 33% somewhat agreed on the big influence the media has on people in France. Additionally, stereotypes turned out to play an important role in the country as well (41% strongly agree, 37% somewhat agree) which was also mentioned during qualitative research multiple times.

What are current bottlenecks with regards to promotion and communication?
Bottlenecks can be found in the aspects that the interviews spoke about, such as the influence of the media, lacking destination knowledge, sensitive pricing and ineffective relationship building. The importance of personal interaction was stressed by multiple interviewees. Lacking destination knowledge as well as media influence also became obvious during quantitative research. However, the bottleneck of personal interaction turned out to be less of a problem: French clients put less importance and relevance on this issue. It can be concluded that some bottlenecks can rather be seen as “not taken opportunities”, such as TV ads, printed material and presentations, as found out through the survey.

The next section deals with the specific research question 1. The research question for this research strategy was "What are the requirements of the French market regarding promotion?" which will be answered for the main sub-questions. Please note that many of these statements were included in the above conclusion of research question 2.

1.1 How do French travel companies want to communicate?
As retrieved from the surveys as well as the interviews, it can be stated that personal meetings, hence face-to-face communication is crucial for French clients. However, as mentioned above, most clients prefer to meet only when necessary or once a year. Another aspect is that most respondents prefer email over telephone communication.

After conducting the research, direct marketing turned out to be quite relevant. It was found out during both researches that the majority of clients would be interested in presentations held by Hotels & More. Moreover, as seen in the survey results, direct calling seems to be less of an option for French clients. Interviews and survey both showed that chasing should not be done and that contact should only take place when necessary. The same outcome was found for meetings in person: once a year or only when necessary reached the highest score by clients. Furthermore, as retrieved during the interviews, the brochure of Hotels & More is a helpful tool to show products and services. This was also emphasized in the survey result with 43% somewhat agreeing to this.

As stated above, the most wanted personal contact frequency between clients and Hotels & More is only when necessary. However, 12% voted for once month and 2% for daily. As retrieved from the interviews, French clients do not like to be chased which can be seen in the surveys as well: A quarter disagreed and 39% somewhat disagreed to wanting to be reminded at least once a month. Thus it can be concluded that contact should only take place to a reasonable extent.

As elaborated above, trade shows are seen to be very relevant, as indicated by Hotels & More interviewees and French clients themselves. Appointments are less popular, but attendance is important: 18% of clients strongly agreed to this and 51% find it somewhat important to be present. Hence it can be concluded that attendance at trade shows is very relevant and should be continued in the future.

1.2 What are French travel companies attracted to?
Retrievable from the survey results, it can be said that interesting facts and original, exciting tours sent in newsletters are most suitable content for French clients. Information, business news, attractive design with images and traditional tours were also named to be relevant, however quite behind the first two factors. Another important factor to take into account are magazines. In the interviews, it was already found out that French clients (and citizens) are interested in reading magazines. Quantitative research confirms this finding with a majority indicating to read travel magazines regularly. As for TV advertisement, 43% agreed somewhat and 16% strongly to being influenced by it. The qualitative research also had the outcome of TV being a central part of French people's lives. Moreover, public adverts such as posters tend to be quite relevant for French clients and end-clients. It is important to point out that the online activity in general is less relevant: 45% stayed neutral whereas 27% somewhat agreed that it is important. During the interviews, it became clear that for instance sending out newsletters should not take place too often. Clients indicated that receiving newsletters every week is too frequent. The outcome of the survey supports this statement as most somewhat agreed that they would like to receive the newsletter every two weeks or less. This is important to keep in mind and closely connected to the general contact frequency.

Sales promotions create a reward, rather than a reason to buy a certain product/service. For this project, sales promotions as such are less relevant and were not addressed during the interviews and the survey. However, this could be related to the general price sensivity that was mentioned during the interviews. Certain rewards or short-term incentives would be initiated by the sales team and would only be communicated via marketing.

During the interviews, it was found out that general destination knowledge is lacking, for instance with regards to food standards. The survey results show that 67% of French clients stated to lack knowledge about the destination UK and Ireland and only 2% consider themselves experts. This shows that there is room for improvement which the respondents also agreed on themselves: the majority (71%) said they would like to know more about the destination and other attractions and spots as well (67%). Hence it can be stated that destination knowledge plays an important role and needs to be paid attention to as shown in the outcomes of both research methods.

1.3 What is the buying behavior of the French market?
The general (average) time of booking is rather late as retrieved from the interviews. Almost all interviewees agreed on often last-minute bookings or generally bookings for close dates.
As elaborated in the section “What are typical buying and culture characteristics of the French?”, city trips and rather short than long tours are the most popular for the French. The survey report shows that Ireland (31%) is among London (27%) the key destination that is sold. It is important to point out that 27% sell only London and no other city or region in the UK and Ireland. Ireland and London are followed by Scotland and England with almost an equal percentage. 33% mainly sell city trips and 31% round tours. Cultural tours (19%) followed with historical tours, active tours and culinary tours being less common. In addition, seeing the general (classic) sights was found to be crucial while a central location and good quality of the accommodation plays a very important role as well. These latter aspects were distinguished during the interviews: interviewees mentioned a difference between seniors and workers which was not distinguished in the survey. However, the outcome was clear and there was no indication for a distinction.

As already filtered out during the qualitative research already, the media influences French people to a large extent. Especially the news have an influence on the thoughts and opinions of the French. Supporting this, the survey showed that 57% of clients strongly agree and 33% somewhat agree on the big influence media has on people in France. Additionally, stereotypes turned out to play an important role in the country as well (41% strongly agree, 37% somewhat agree). With regards to political developments in the UK and Ireland, the majority of clients somewhat agreed on being informed about it while 25% stay neutral. However, it can be seen that the percentage of somewhat disagreeing and strongly agreeing respondents is almost the same. Hence there is quite a lot of variation among the knowledge about developments. It can be concluded that the media as well as the image of a country can have a big impact on clients and their end-clients, so French travel in general which needs to be kept in mind. The survey also showed that most of the clients believe they have a helpful contact person at Hotels & More to inform them about negative happenings and news.

2.3.4 Discussion of validity and reliability

This chapter deals with the discussion of construct validity, internal validity, external validity and reliability to examine the quality of both research methods.

Wainer and Braun (1998) describe construct validity as the assessment of the measurement procedure. They state that the construct is the concept or hypothesis. In this case, construct validity can be considered high. This is due to the reason that the construct of both researches were entirely based on the operationalizations that were established. These operationalizations were the outcome of the concepts unravelled in the theoretical framework. Using relevant literature and models increase construct validity and it could be made sure that the outcome of the research is relevant for the concept.

Furthermore, internal validity is assessed to find out whether the answer is the answer to the initially asked research questions. As for the interviews, coding is an indicator for high internal validity since the codes that were given are similar to the components of the research question. The coding was only possible after transcribing each interview, hence this also contributed to the internal validity. The student was able to connect all statements and opinions to the initial research questions. Also, the fact that recordings were made indicates that a proof is given and the results could be re-examined if needed. Also for the quantitative research, internal validity can be considered high: firstly because the research was based on the outcome of the previous research. The research questions were implemented as sections in the survey which indicates that the research is internally valid. By implementing these sections, the student was able to answer the questions by analysing the survey results. Verhoeven (2014) states that a triangulation would make it possible to compare results and would make a research more valid. Providing different data collection methods can confirm or support outcomes and thus increase internal validity. The student made us of the triangulation by combining two research methods. Many statements and outcomes were confirmed and support each other, while a few contrasted each other.

External validity shows whether the findings could be applied to a bigger group as well. In this case, external validity is only assessed as medium for both research methods. The findings could be generalized and applied to travel agencies or coach operators in general. However, as the findings include statements about cultural and political influences, results would probably vary a lot from other source markets, such as the Netherlands or Germany. The recommendations the student will make based on the outcome would not be suitable for other inbound tour operators. This is due to the fact that structure, activities and goals vary among businesses, therefore external validity is only limited. Moreover, as for the quantitative research, only 8% of all potential respondents filled out the survey which means that results could be varying if more respondents would have answered. As a summary, it can be said that generalization for the population can be done whereas “further out” would not be suitable, hence external validity is provided to a medium extent.

Lastly, high reliability indicates that the outcome would be the same if the research would be repeated. Verhoeven (2014) states that perceptions “may change over time” and lead to decreased reliability when circumstances change. However, if the student would approach the same respondents in the same circumstances and asking the same questions, the outcome of the qualitative research would most probably be the same. The interviewees are experts in their field and know the market, therefore their opinions and statements would most likely be the same. Verhoeven (2014) also mentions that recordings and transcripts of interviews contribute to the reliability because saving processed data indicates higher quality. In case of a repeated survey, respondents would most probably give the same answers. However, on the other hand it must be noted that other developments could influence the outcome as well, such as political developments or the internet. Also, as shortly mentioned above, the 8% of respondents are only a small part of the entire sample. Therefore, if the research would be repeated for the entire sample, different respondents might answer which could change the outcomes.

It can be concluded that reliability is rather high for those who filled out the survey but decreases when looking at the sample as a whole as different businesses might give different input. Another factor that contributes to the reliability, according to Verhoeven (2014), is the report that was established through Saxion Qualtrics. Saving this data indicates high quality and increases the reliability of the research.
3. Advisory part

The objective of the advice has been set in the beginning: To establish a revised promotional plan to adjust the approach of targeting French clients, increase sales and build long-term partnerships as mentioned in the vision. The management/advice question that was posed is: “How can Hotels & More adjust their promotional plan in order to match the requirements and buying behavior of the French B2B market?”.

3.1 Evaluation of solutions

The solution for Hotels & More is given in form of a promotional plan, consisting of the elements advertising, public relations, direct marketing/personal selling and sales promotions as established in the framework. In this section two promotional plan options for Hotels & More are presented in a table to give an overview. Afterwards, the student will elaborate on the differences between the options, the choice and the reasoning based on certain criteria.

(Legend: Green = option 1, Orange = option 2, regular black = in both options)

As shown in the table, the main difference between the two options are online and offline promotions. In this paragraph the different components are elaborated.

- Advertising (option 1 with online focus, option 2 with offline focus): Advertising is found both offline (option 2) and online (option 1). Due to the fact that TV can have a big influence on French people, Hotels & More should consider placing ads on TV for either option, potentially in collaboration with tourism broadcasters, bigger tour operators or tourism boards. This is already done in the German market (Sonnenklar TV is promoting Hotels & More’s services and products with the key focus to showcase the destination). Hotels & More should consider collaborating with French travel channels that would be willing to include Hotels & More in their portfolio.

Option 1 suggests an online E-brochure, accessible for a broader audience while a printed version is part of option 2. Currently, an online version is used by Hotels & More, and printed versions are produced as well, showcasing the businesses products and services and tips. In addition, Hotels & More could produce an image brochure introducing the company and the holding company with all its brands. This brochure should provide destination knowledge as this turned out to be lacking (67%) in the French market. Also due to the fact that interesting destination facts are what the French are interested in, these should be included in the image brochure as well. This brochure can be published online and offline, depending on the chosen option. An increased advertising should be done for destinations outside of London including interesting facts that could catch the attention of the market, something the French can relate to. In case of option 2, it will be printed and sent to clients directly, potentially in form of a small book or leaflet. Option 1 will publish the brochure on the website.

Both options include the newsletter. It is important to not “chase” clients, hence they should be sent out 1–2 times a month only. The content should consist of interesting facts, original tours and new trends and developments. As the booking point in time can be short notice, newsletters do not need to be sent out much in advance. For example, winter–themed tours can be advertised in autumn rather than in summer. Sending out such newsletters far in advance can lead to being ignored it as it is not relevant for the clients yet. It showed that an attractive design is crucial as well, thus catchy images and short, interesting facts need to be included. Another relevant content could be information about events in the UK and Ireland as well as relevant content about hotels, exciting activities and especially culinary aspects should be highlighted.

It is important to bring other destinations closer as this is lacking, but seems to be in interest of French clients. Hotels & More should consider placing advertisements in online or printed travel magazines. The content of these ads should be carefully selected. Not only classical tours and activities, but rather introducing new destinations that could be of interest should be introduced. However, not only adverts, but also articles about happenings in the UK and Ireland could catch client’s attention and lead to interest in the products. Whether focussing on online travel magazines or printed ones also depends on the chosen option. At the moment, Hotels & More publishes printed and online adverts for the German market which is often offered in a package.

In cooperation with tourism boards, such as VisitBritain or Tourism Ireland, Hotels & More could place advertisements in public spaces, such as posters or busses, raising awareness not only for Hotels & More, but for the Green Isles in general (as this is in interest of the tourist boards). Hotels & More already has an ongoing commercial partnership with VisitBritain; the tourist board has an office in Paris which could actively help to promote Hotels & More and their destinations. In the online-focused promotional plan, social media needs to be developed further. Despite clients mostly being neutral (and 27% somewhat agreeing to the importance), it was stressed that social activities should be increased since it is on the rise in general. At the moment, social media content is published in English. For option 1 this would be changed to French social media activities with content specifically tailored to French clients. For option 2, social media will be maintained in English and kept rather general.

- Public relations:

Regarding public relations, as shortly named above, a tourist board such as VisitBritain could be supportive of communicating with French clients on spot. As it turned out during the research, French people like to have a French-speaking, reliable contact to inform them about important events and news. Not only should Hotels & More have a 24-hour emergency service, an appropriate crisis management with truthful and quick reactions is important as well. Especially due to political changes lately, it is crucial to communicate properly and in a timely manner. A potential tool could be an online interaction tool, such as a live chat on the website or a Q&A section, where clients can easily access all information they need. This way, Hotels & More could ensure that clients are informed at all times and able to pose questions and receive quick responses. Moreover, Hotels & More could remove uncertainties and inform via travel magazines or TV advertisements as well. Especially the company’s website can be used as a tool to promote events and spread important news in form of press releases or breaking news, just like the newsletter to be sent out. As retrieved from theoretical framework, informing and reacting upon certain developments is a central part of public relations and should be managed carefully.

- Direct marketing/personal selling:

With regards to personal meetings, the current sales trips to meet existing and new clients, taking place once a month should continue. The importance was also stressed during the interviews. However, visiting existing clients should only take place when necessary, or once a year as mentioned by the majority. During the research it became clear that existing clients do not see more regular meetings as necessary. With regards to follow-up calls, it is important to keep in mind that clients quickly develop the feeling of being chased. They should only be contacted when necessary. In general, staff should consider sending emails rather than calling clients, if the issue is not urgent. Concerning trade shows, Hotels & More should continue to attend Top Resa in Paris; being present at this trade show is crucial. Since appointments do not seem to be popular, Hotels & More could invite clients more non-binding, more "stop-by our stand"-focused. Presentations about Hotels & More and its sister companies are in the interest of French clients. Therefore, a general presentation about Hotels & More, the product offering for all destinations needs to be created. For specific tours, a presentation or flyer should be developed as well for bigger associations to help selling the product. Also concerning direct marketing, the brochure, as stated above, should be produced online, with a digital version sent to clients directly. Whenever staff are in contact with clients, merchandise, such as desk calendars, pens and other branded items should be handed out.

- Sales promotions:

Sales promotions are initiated by the sales team in coordination with contracting and only communicated through marketing. Due to the high price sensitivity, Hotels & More could consider incentives or loyalty schemes, e.g. for anniversaries. However, they are not relevant part of the promotional activities.

Selected criteria and reason for choice

This section deals with the criteria the student has set and which choice was made based on these criteria. The following table shows an overview over the criteria and the scores:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>

</tbody>

(Legend: 1 = negative impact, 5 = positive impact)

In general, both options are quite similar. The main difference lays in the focus of online vs. offline promotions. As a consequence, costs as well as impact vary among these two.

Firstly, the criteria “in line with company’s vision” had to be met. For both options, this is the case as both options focus on building stable partnerships in order “to become the leading and preferred inbound tour operator for Great Britain and Ireland (Maine, 2017)”. Both promotional plans have the purpose to highly contribute to the vision by raising awareness, developing partnerships and thus increasing sales.

Secondly, the criteria of costs was selected. As mentioned by Vera Lett (2018), a business always intends to save money wherever possible ensuring a high return of investment. Especially due to the fact that most revised activities bring monetary changes, costs need to be considered and assessed (further discussed in 3.2). Furthermore, the level of expenditure of time was chosen as a criteria because it needs to be assessed how soon the project can be realised. Some changes can take time, some are quickly realisable, hence there is a difference between the two options. Also due to the fact that the company needs to budget the plan, it needs to be known how much time the activities require. The criteria of positive impact entails the (long-term) impact the revised plan will have on the business of Hotels & More. The impact needs to be large for Hotels & More to implement the changes. If the impact is too small, the activities are not effective and the change is not useful for the company. This criteria was chosen to be the most relevant as it indicates the long-term improvements. Another crucial criteria is required resources. In order to implement the suggested changes, certain resources are required, meaning sufficient staff. The additional costs and the effort to hire the staff can have a negative impact on the changes, hence given a score of 2 (slightly negative impact). However, this criteria was not chosen to be the most important as a large positive impact will make this slightly negative impact worth it.

The student chooses promotional plan 2 to be implemented. The main reason for this choice is the impact this option has on the market. As found out during the field research, print material is crucial for the French. Therefore, a printed brochure and image brochure as well as adverts and press articles in travel magazines make more sense than online activity. Despite the increase, it became obvious that French clients are not too active online and would prefer physical material. Another reason for this choice is that clients are able to have printed material on-hand, a constant reminder which leads to more attention than having a link in an email which might be forgotten about. Closely related to the aspect of lacking destination knowledge, the printed image brochure not only promotes Hotels & More as a company and Tour Partner Group, but also presents the destination in general, especially highlights and locations they are less aware of. A goal is to raise awareness for other destinations outside of London or other typical (city trip) products. The results of the survey showed that magazines are very popular in France which is a big opportunity for Hotels & More. Not only adverts with products and services, but also news and events are interesting for the French which is a chance for Hotels & More to raise awareness of their existence and promote the destination. It was mentioned that French people are interested in happenings, for example the Royal Wedding, about which Hotels & More could write articles including eye-catching images to increase attention. Option 1 included this as an online activity which is less suitable due to the importance of printed material. The articles could also be published via the mentioned tourist boards. Furthermore, these boards are very suitable with regards to communication. When looking at the previously operationalized model of Rajec (2017) in appendix 6.3.4., it becomes clear that the stage of consideration involves many aspects, such as reviews and media. Especially due to (political) happenings, it is important not to “lose” clients at this stage and inform them thoroughly about developments. Tourist boards could be useful partners to communicate and provide information on spot. When looking at the operationalization of the promotional mix (6.3.1), crisis management is part of public relations and closely related to the appropriate communication with clients. The operationalization of business buying behavior also entails environmental influence factors, such as cultural, economic and political. During the research, these factors were found to be very relevant. Therefore, having a French expert based in France who is representing the company, communicating and informing clients clearly would be supportive. Moreover, tourist boards could overlook what is shown in the media as this is a big influencing factor for French people. Hence a collaboration with tourist boards brings opportunities for Hotels & More. Together with offices in France or independently, Hotels & More should publish public posters in the urban regions as this turned out to catch attention of travel agents and partners.
This option includes social media, but solely to be continued in English as currently, not specifically targeted to French clients. In contrast, the newsletter will continue to be sent out 1–2 times per month with revised content as stated above. Sales trips, trade shows and presentations are equally important for both options.

With regards to costs, it can be said that option 1 would probably have been less cost-intensive. From own experience, the student realized that online advertisement is generally cheaper than printed advertisement. However, according to Marketing Communication Executive Swea Hagenhoff (2018) the cost difference is becoming smaller as online ads become increasingly expensive. The printed brochure and image brochure are more cost-intensive than simply publishing them online. However, due to the large impact the second option can have on the market, cost-efficiency was counted as less relevant.

The reason for both options not scoring higher is the general financial investment, especially due to TV advertisements. With regards to time expenditure both options scored 3 since there is no major difference in the time it would take to implement the changes. Both options include the creation of products such as a brochure, adverts or presentations – whether they are published online or offline does not vary timewise. The only more time-consuming aspect for option 2 could be liaising with printing agencies for printing brochures. As for required resources, both options score 2 since the new needed resources can have a negative impact: the costs and effort of hiring new staff brings a lot of change but is considered less important since the positive impact would overweight.

It is important to provide context through models in order to see how the promotional plan is related to buying behavior, decision making and the product life cycle. Next to Rajecck’s (2017) model, the product life cycle (6.3.5) creates context. It can be stated that overall, Hotels & More is located in the growth/maturity stage; the company is constantly trying to build brand awareness/preference and increase market share for all source markets. However, for the French market in particular, the stage of introduction is still relevant. This is due to the fact that Hotels & More is trying to educate about products and services, especially the ones that are not popular and known yet. The company continues to raise awareness of its brand which is why the research project was initiated. As a result, Hotels & More is present in three stages of the product life cycle.

Lamb and Hair (2010) state that each stage of the product life cycle promotional activities have a certain purpose. In this case, promotion should not only inform, but also persuade and remind clients. The first stage to raise awareness is similar to phases of the decision making process as shown in 6.3.3. The revised promotional plan intererferes in the stages of need recognition and search for information. French clients react upon a certain stimulus which is supposed to be influenced through Marketing (external stimulus). The external search for information can also be influenced by Marketing, hence these are the phases where Hotels & More can interfere and influence clients in their decision making. As stated by McDaniel, Lamb & Hair (2012), it is helpful to prevent and reduce cognitive dissonance by sending post-purchase letters, surveys or collect feedback from customers.

Goals of the revised promotional plan
In order to be able to evaluate the new plan better, specific goals were set. The different SMART goals are stated below for each activity of the chosen promotional plan respectively:

3.2 Implementation
This section deals with the implementation of the revised promotional plan. The PDCA cycle illustrates the implementation and the effects it has the parties involved. The cycle includes the following components:

- Plan: What needs to be amended, planning of the change
- Do: Implement the change, carry–out in full or test parts
- Check: Assess the changes, evaluation of successes and failures
- Act: React upon the assessment, potentially fully adopt the change (standardize)
An elaboration of the most important elements can be found below the table.

Major changes:
The parties most involved in the implementation of the revised promotional plan are the Commercial Director, the Marketing Manager and the Marketing team. Secondly, the sales team as well as the contracting team are involved to create content for the brochure. An important aspect to consider are human resources: At the moment the Marketing team does not include French speaking members.

It needs to be ensured that the team consists of sufficient French-speaking team members suitable for the projects. Especially when looking at new projects such as image brochure, magazine articles and adverts as well as presentations, enough French staff is needed to manage the workload and complete tasks in time. In addition, the introduced live chat on the website needs to be supervised at all times. This is another crucial aspect concerning human resource management. Moreover, as retrieved from Commercial Director Vera Lett (2018), Hotels & More, moving forward, undertakes marketing activities for the TPG group as a whole. Therefore, collaboration among the sister companies needs to take place and the French speaking colleagues need to be involved in all activities. The change in human resources can be seen as the starting point as this is needed in order to ensure coping with the workload.

There are no major changes regarding sales trips, presentations and trade show attendance. The sales team will be majorly involved as presentations will be held by the sales team while on a sales trip. Both sales and contracting teams attend the trade shows whereas Marketing organizes them.

With regards to financial consequences, various costs needs to be taken into account and included in the budget. This includes attendance of trade shows, print material for the brochure and image brochure, sales trips (accommodation and travel costs), magazine advertisement, TV advertisement, costs for collaboration with tourist boards, development of a live chat on the website and merchandise articles. Marked in green are the components that do not increase costs for Hotels & More, and marked in red the ones where additional costs are involved (compared to the current spendings). A few of the costs are elaborated underneath. Please note that these are estimated numbers to give a general picture.

The right column shows the estimated cost changes compared to the current Marketing expenses. The components which have a major impact on the monetary changes are human resources, the additional printed image brochure and TV advertisements as these are quite cost-intensive. Despite many changes do not have an influence on the budget, hiring more staff, paying additional printing costs and fees for TV ads could have a major impact on the budget of Hotels & More. The client wishes not to provide actual financial data, however, the following cost can be assumed based on current costs and own insight:

It can be estimated that Hotels & More will continue spending approximately € 4,000,- on printing 1800 brochures and an additional € 200,- for postage to send 700 items to clients. As for the image brochure, costs can be estimated to be slightly less due to the smaller amount. As retrieved from own insight, adverts in French magazines are slightly more expensive than in German magazines. Hence the student estimates one advert to cost approximately € 1,200,- for a quarter of a page. If publishing as suggested (every 3 months in 2 magazines), the spendings would add up to approximately € 9,600,- a year. Costs for merchandise articles will not increase. For instance, pens and lanyards usually cost less than €1/item, adding up to a total of € 1,400,- if sent to all clients.

With regards to TV advertising, it was retrieved that broadcasting tours on travel channels is expensive. Specific costs were not named, however, costs can be divided between Hotels & More and the end--
The student assumes TV advertisement to take up a 30% increase in costs from the IST situation as these TV shows reach a large amount of people and are seen as very effective. For publishing, Hotels & More could collaborate with Tourist Boards and therefore save money as well. Stand and service costs for Top Resa can be estimated to exceed € 10,000,- plus travel and accommodation costs for all attendees. The latter also concerns sales trips where accommodation and travel costs can be estimated to total approximately € 3,000,— per trip.

To ensure a positive long-term outcome, a cost–benefit-analysis can be executed. Since the student does not have access to specific financial data, the costs versus benefits are included in the overview below, based on the set SMART goals.

The budget for the Marketing department is done on a yearly basis, in quarter four for the following year. The budget and spendings from the previous years are used as a basis to set up the new budget. From personal experience, the student learned that tourist boards, such as VisitBritain, can fund certain products and services in order to drive tourism to the specific areas. At the moment, Hotels & More has a commercial partnership with VisitBritain to promote the destination and receives funds which should also be taken into account for promotion for the French market.

3.3 Conclusion

The outcome of both research methods gave detailed insights into what French clients are attracted to and looking for. The student chose to implement an additional printed image brochure with lesser text.
Next to the outcome of preferred printed material, the big lack of destination knowledge lead to this solution. With the image brochure, the company can respond to the issue by using a medium that is attractive to them – printed material with catchy images and interesting and helpful information about the destination. Furthermore, Hotels & More is able to react upon certain characteristics such as watching TV and reading magazines regularly. The company was not aware of this behavior as all markets were approached in the same way. Therefore, placing articles – products and press releases – in magazines and potentially collaborating with TV broadcasters related to travel responds to this typical behavior and can be beneficial. Moreover, the research gave good insight into the general interest in presentations and meetings. For Hotels & More it is crucial to know what they see as a suitable frequency for meetings and general contact. The field research showed which content clients would like to receive in newsletters and how important social media and the brochure are. Hotels & More has the opportunity to react upon these characteristics and target their promotional activities to increase sales and establish more partnerships. Regarding communication, the business can make use of partnerships with tourist boards such as VisitBritain and Tourism Ireland. Not only products and services can be advertised in public and online, also news and events as well as information about the destination can be communicated. In addition, these associations could also fund Hotels & More in marketing products in return which can reduce costs.

As a summary, the implemented plan introduces an additional brochure, printed advertisements, TV advertisement, a live chat tool and potential tourist board collaborations. Hotels & More should keep in mind that these different components of the revised promotional plan have an impact on costs. However, despite the increasing costs for staff, printed material and additional advertisement, the implemented changes can be considered feasible and realistic. The impact this could have on the business can be big and beneficial and the company’s strategy to build long-term partnerships can be supported. Due to this, impact was chosen as the most important criteria, leaving increasing costs behind. The management question “How can Hotels & More adjust their promotional plan in order to match the requirements and buying behavior of the French B2B market?” has been answered in 3.1.

The student suggests that further research should be carried out, especially with regards to destination knowledge and products. As found out during research, there is a possibility that coach operators and travel agencies require different products and provide a different level of destination knowledge. They also provide different clients (workers, seniors, scholars) which could lead to different requirements. The implemented change addresses all clients.
4. Afterword

4.1 Day to day practice reflection

When looking back on the past semester, I believe the overall organization and management of the project went well. Starting off with strong points, I consider the communication between all parties a positive aspect. Both client and examiner were available to provide feedback at all times and issues were addressed immediately. To name an example, both parties provided feedback with regards to structure and style of writing (e.g. long, confusing sentences) which helped me improve. I think communication is crucial and transparency made the project go smooth as everyone was on the same page and updated about the progress.

Additionally, a strong point was the organization itself: firstly, I set myself certain goals each week to make sure I finish what I wanted to. These goals helped me stay in the time frame and not having to stress towards the end. If repeating the project, I would do the same. Also, working for Hotels & More in the mornings and working on the thesis in the afternoons was a great compromise. Secondly, I made an overview for myself where key aspects and notes were stated in order to not miss out on important elements.

It was helpful to execute interviews before setting up a survey, this way I did not start “from scratch” and was able to retrieve more detailed information. Even though two methods were quite time consuming, it supported the outcome as I was also able to compare results. Moreover, the fact that I work in the Marketing department supported the project: I had quite a lot of insight before and was able to understand things quicker as that is what I deal with on a regular basis. I believe being in the environment supported the execution of the project.

On the other hand, something I would do differently when repeating the thesis concerns the research itself. For the TPD, I talked to Rienk van Marle, the assigned research teacher, who offered great support. For the thesis itself, I did not approach him again which I would do if repeating the project. I felt confident carrying it out without consultation, however, I believe he could have given helpful tips and comments. Another weak point was the time management in the beginning in general. Overall I am confident with the time management, however due to two research methods, the field research itself was quite time-consuming. If I would repeat the thesis, I would try to start the entire research part earlier to be able to have more time for the analysis and advice.

Not necessarily a weak point, but something critical is the topic itself. Marketing entails quite a lot of aspects, components and characteristics related to it. During the project, I realized that there could be many more (more specific) researches and sub-projects done about the topic.

As for personal development, I not only learned much more about promotional activities and the importance of market-specific marketing, but also improved my independent working abilities. Being able to work on an “own” project with a “real” client helped me become even more independent and taught me not to hesitate in case of questions.

4.2 Value for the industry

The need that is addressed in this project is certainly an issue for the whole industry. Yield management, approaching the right customers in the right way at the right time is crucial nowadays.
Tailored marketing activities are necessary in order to reach clients correctly and be able to increase business. Therefore, the topic itself provides value for the industry as a whole. As mentioned before, the outcome could be applied to a larger population. However, since cultural and political characteristics are considered as well, the results might not apply to other business in the industry (such as other nationalities). The thesis itself is responsive to the recognized needs of the industry in the sense that tailored/customized promotions are necessary for every company. Especially in tourism, there is a lot of variety among businesses and clients and the services they require. Hence the amendment to one specific market has a lot of meaning and a large impact on sales. It needs to be taken into account that there are constant changes and the industry develops quickly. Therefore, even though the project is relevant at the moment, the situation and outcomes might differ in the future. However, I believe this project provides value for the industry and showed how important it is to customize and adapt to a certain clientele in order to be most profitable.

6.6 Interview guide

Interview Guide
The interviews will take place with different parties from Hotels & More as well as the sister company Irish Welcome Tours. The student intends to interview Vera Lett, Commercial Director at Hotels & More, Marie-Laure Devigne (Sales Manager France) and a France Sales manager at IWT. Hence the questions below are not specifically focused on Hotels & More but kept general.

The student set up open questions to gain as much insight as possible while sub-aspects are mentioned to make sure all topics are covered. Follow-up questions should be asked. This interview is mainly based on the operationalized promotion mix to gain insight into what is being done (or should be done differently) with regards to the specific components. The resulting outcome will be used as a basis for the surveys in the market itself. The surveys will then be based on the buying behavior and decision making operationalized concepts as this can become much more specific.

- Introduction student, introduction interviewee, ask for permission to record and use results with name, state approximate duration of the interview
- Goal of the interview: to get insight into different aspects of promotion for the French market and the market itself, outcome of revised promotional plan for the French market
- Questions and sub aspects

1. What is your role?
   - How involved in the French market (contact frequency)
2. To what extent do you think does the French market vary from others?
   - Compare to e.g. Germany
   - What exactly is different, should be treated differently
3. With regards to the company’s advertising (online and print), what is currently done for the French market specifically (content and frequency)?
   - Social media
   - Magazines
   - Posters
   - Websites
   - TV/radio
   - Also: Is any of this done for other markets at once (e.g. Germany)?

4. With regards to public relations, what is currently done for the French market specifically (content and frequency)?
   - Product placements in magazines
   - Product placements on websites
   - Informing about the destinations, removing uncertainties (relating to crisis management)
   - Sponsorships
   - News, events, updates, interaction with customers
   - Trade shows
   - Word of mouth
   - Also: Is any of this done for other markets at once (e.g. Germany)?

5. To what extent does personal selling take place (content and frequency)?
   - Presentations
   - Direct calls/emails
   - Trade shows
   - Client visits

6. To what extent are sales promotions being done?
   - Loyalty programs
   - Incentives
   - Free samples/trials
   - Is this similar to other markets as well (e.g. Germany)?

7. From your experience, what distinguishes the French market at most from others?
   - What products they buy
   - When they buy
   - How they search for information
   - Communication

8. Are there any factors that influence the buying behavior of the French market?
   - Culture
   - Politics
   - Motivational
   - Structure of French travel companies

9. What are current or potential future bottlenecks or problems with regards to promoting for the French market?

10. Is there anything you would like to add?

   - Thank you and closing (double-check again permission to use name and results)
6.7 Interviews

6.7.1 Marie Laure Devigne
Interview on promotional activities at Hotels & More
Harrow, April 16th 2016, 42:00 min.

Interviewer (IR): Luisa Litckemeyer
Interviewee (IE): Marie Laure Devigne, Sales Manager at Hotels & More
Interview number: 1

1 IR: Hello Marie Laure.
2 IE: Hello Luisa.

3 IR: Thank you very much for taking the time for me today to have this interview. Just to give you a short introduction, I mean you know me, I don’t need to give you an introduction about that, before we start I would like to have you confirm that it’s okay that we record this and that I use your name in my thesis.

4 IE: No problem.

5 IR: Perfect, thank you. This will take approximately 30 minutes, maybe a little bit less depending on if I get the information that I would like to get.

6 IE: Okay.

7 IR: The goal of the interview is to get insight into the different aspects of the promotion for the French market and the market itself because what we’re trying to do is to look at how they want to be approached, how they want to communicate and what they want to see and receive. And, yeah, I’m just gonna ask you a few questions and….

8 IE: No problem.

9 IR: … whatever comes to your mind, spit it out.

10 IE: I will tell you.

11 IR: First of all, maybe a short introduction about what you exactly do, what is your role, and what’s the contact frequency with French customers for you?

12 IE: Daily, it’s daily.

13 IR: Yeah!

14 IE: Okay, so I’m the manager of the “Rest of the World” team, but I’m focusing mostly on the French market definitely. So I’m dealing with the team first of all, that’s the first thing I have to do. And then I’m dealing with the development and also with the most important clients, existing clients. We have divided clients between existing clients – the ones that are already working with us – and new potential clients, so I’m more focusing on development.

15 IR: Yeah, okay.
IE: So calling clients on a regular basis, doing some research as well to find new potential and then visiting them if you need to visit them, if they are big enough to be visited.

IR: Yeah, okay, I’m not sure how familiar you are with the German market. What do you think are typical characteristics of the French market, how they want to communicate, how often, do they want to meet, do they like phone, do they like email, whatever comes to your head, what’s typical for the French market?

IE: The French market is a totally different market than the German market. I’m not familiar with the German market, but I know that the French market is totally different. The use of travelling are not the same at all. Not at all. They want to take their time, they want to have fun. They want to, food is part of the trip. It’s just, like really important that they just take some time to experience the food definitely. So they want a break, so at least you can have one activity in the morning and one activity in the afternoon, but not more than that. They just want to relax, they want to take their time to visit. Sometimes they want to be in the hotel early as well because they feel like you know they want to rest in the evening, but food is definitely something really important to them, so that’s totally different. Then after that, they are quite tricky as well. They don’t want to be chased. Regarding the B2B agency, they don’t want to be chased, they like being called on a regular basis, not that much, so if you just call them three weeks after you just call them, they will say “why are you calling me back?”...

IR: Oh, wow.

IE: “You have called me last week” – “no I have called you three weeks ago” – “oh, yeah but that’s the same”...

IR: Okay.

IE: So it’s quite like, you have to be really careful because they don’t feel like being called on a... yeah. Regarding special offers, that’s the thing as well, we are sending newsletters and we were sending them on a weekly basis and it just (not understandable), it’s just too much. They say “it’s too much, could you please just send less newsletters as well because it’s just too much, we just don’t have time to watch it... so they don’t want to be chased, they don’t want to be like harrassed...

IR: ... stressed...

IE: ... like it’s kind of harrassment, just as a metaphor. An example, you have a French person that is going in a shop, you know doing some shopping for example, and the shopkeeper is just coming saying “could help you”, they will feel that it’s kind of harrassment and they will feel that “ah you know I just want to have a look you know”...

IR: Don’t stress me...

IE: They don’t like that. They don’t like that at all, so you have to be really careful and not doing that kind of, they just imagine that is kind of harrassment or some pushing. And they don’t like to be pushed.

IR: Okay.

IE: So you really have to be like, really diplomatic and have a really good reason to call, haha.
IR: That's also actually my next question. For the advertising that we did because I know that we sent newsletters and that then they said it's too often. Do you know about any TV, radio advertisements they would like to have or any magazines they would like to receive, any information about the destination, any other kind of advertisement that they really like—online or offline?

IE: Usually they are receiving... it depends. If they are a travel agency or if they are a coach operator. Because they are not interested in the same thing, they are not like... so if they are travel agencies, they are mostly working with individuals and they have just like a “Quotidien du Tourisme” or some stuff like that because they just want to have like general news regarding what (not understandable) news like that. They are not really interested in things regarding destination to be frank because a travel agency most of them they have been trained and have some degree in Tourism, so, but the coach operators are the ones who need information regarding destination because those ones they are coach operators, and most of the time they were just like doing transportation. And then at one point they just decided to “okay, how can we grow the business? Let’s have an agreement to be like a travel agency”. And that’s the person that was like doing transportation that didn’t know a thing about destination.

IR: Yeah, yeah.

IE: And that’s the one that are just like going into newspapers regarding destinations, or newsletters and are interested in more trainings because that’s the ones that haven’t like a degree, haven’t been trained because they were just doing transportation and they developed to grow the business into that and they just did like a... so those ones they are more into like “Voyages cu Groupe”. That is a newspaper as well, a kind of magazine and in this one, yes you have like this destination, you have like a, some articles about fam trips that have been done in, I don’t know, Edinburgh whatever. But it’s just like more complex. Travel agencies are more into new techniques, new software to work on, all that kind of things, but not really into... and also with the tendencies as well you know, travel agencies are more into tendencies, what is more popular, what is the new destination that is growing and coach operators, no they are just like, they are dealing more with seniors—coach operators—they are looking for more things traditional and just like that.

IR: So we, so you say, I mean we have to distinguish between travel agencies and clients and suppliers.

IE: Yeah. Yeah yeah.

IR: So this project will only deal with travel agencies for the clients, so you’re saying destination knowledge or anything that they need to know they basically do already know. So we don’t really need to inform them about new trends and developments, or would you say that that could be content of whatever we send out, newsletters, social media...?

IE: They are interested in new things, new products.

IR: Yeah.

IE: Definitely. They want new products. They want something original. But a coach operator, I was telling you, is also a travel agency.

IR: You consider them as well travel agencies?

IE: Yeah.
IR: Okay.

IE: Because they have the part of the business it's just like doing transportation. But then when they grow the business, they just want to have that things, (not understandable) an agreement and start creating travel.

IR: Yeah.

IE: And those ones definitely need trainings on the destination.

IR: Okay, yeah.

IE: That's why I was just like making the difference.

IR: Yeah, okay!

IE: Just like those ones, because they are not used to do that before. It's just like, you know somebody is just coming, I need a coach for that time, let me give you a coach and that's it you know.

IR: Yeah.

IE: They are just organising that. But then after that they start like doing some trips themselves and just like saying hello and just like selling to the people that are around. And most of the time they don't know anything about the destination because they haven't done it before, so that's the one who definitely needs destination newsletters, news things. Travel agencies they also need, but more like trendy things, new products, they are always looking for something original because you know there are so many competition in France. They want something that is different.

IR: Yeah, yeah.

IE: ... from the others. So yeah no no, it is really important.

IR: It's a good point that we distinguish ...

IE: Yeah.

IR: ... because can't be the general. With regards to public relations, we talked about the destinations – what do you think about interaction with customers, if you think about trade shows, or meetings, how often is it important to French clients to meet in person, or not that often?

IE: It's really important to meet the French clients. Definitely, really really important. That's the key for the market. Because French people they do not trust a company, they trust a person.

IR: Okay.

IE: So if you do not go, and you do not meet them, they will never work with you.

IR: Yeah, that's interesting.
IE: Yeah, that's really really important. They definitely want to meet the person. And it happened to me many times, I have an example: I went with Bernadette from IWT and we visited one client in Paris. It's quite a, it's a medium travel agency, so with potential. And he's just like "oh, I'm really happy to see you guys, I was not working with you because I didn't know you."

IR: Oh ...

IE: And we were just like "you didn't know the company?" and he's like "Oh no I've heard about that company, but I didn't know you physically. So now that I know you, I'm gonna work with you and I'm going to do the business..."

IR: Wow.

IE: ... because you know the competitors, they have come and they have visited me, E-Voyages, they have visited me, Jac Travel they have visited me, but you haven't, you have never come. So I know this guy, everytime he's asking us, everytime he has a request like come to us and just, sometimes we win, sometimes we don't you know because it's a case of prices as well. But before, he was not even requesting us, he was just sending to other people and not asking us.

IR: Cause he never met you.

IE: And that's definitely important, really really important. Especially with the small ones that are in the countryside and nobody comes to see them you know?

IR: Mhm.

IE: But when you go there, they just feel like so important, you know. "You've come to see me, you know, that's so nice. I'm gonna work with you because you have come and see me, so I'm gonna work with you."

IR: Wow.

IE: And definitely on the French market it's really really really important, because they trust the person, not the company. That the person -- the representative, so...

IR: Wow... and some fair trade shows? What do you... I mean I don't know how it was for Top Resa for example, if you made appointments before or...

IE: For Top Resa we made appointments before, but sometimes we're just like French. I'm sorry, we are really tricky and are not like better. They are quite independent.

IR: Okay.

IE: So we tried to get some appointments. But the thing is that, when they are going to Top Resa, they don't really know how it's going to be organized and it's very big. And they don't want to be at the other hand of the exhibition and having that appointment that is blocking them, they have to come here and they are just like you know, they just want to go, and just walk, and they stop whenever they want. So they don't want to, they say "Yeah, I'm gonna come and see you" but they don't want to say "I'm gonna come at that time".
IR: Okay, yeah.
IE: Because they just want to walk and just do like that, you know like each different hallway, and just like walking like that and just, and then they stop whenever they want. They don't want, you know, they are independent. They don't want to...
IR: Nothing scheduled, nothing...
IE: Nothing scheduled. They also, every time we are just like “please, just because we have to fill that (not understandable)”. We definitely have to, but yeah they don't want. So they just say, yeah I'm gonna come, I'm gonna pop up. But I cannot tell you what time I'm gonna pop up. I can tell you that I will be there that day, but...
IR: Okay.
IE: And for us, trade shows are not that important to be frank.
IR: Okay,
IE: It's better to go and visit the clients...
IR: Yeah,
IE: ...yourself. You just go, and they have time for yourself, and they just like take time to speak with you. And you can visit the office, and they are really proud of making you “oh here, it's the office, you know, we have like that many employees and they are just like” they are really proud of their business and they are happy to see you there.
IR: Yeah.
IE: When they go to Top Resa, when they go to a fair, they're just rushing from one place to the other because most of the time, they are not going for the whole week, they are going only one day. And they have many people to see because they just want to say hello to all the suppliers, you know. But I just say “hello”, so they just come and they say “hello, how are things going” and they just talk with you like ten minutes, and they just go away because they just want to see everybody. So when you go and visit them, it's better because you have time, you can have a coffee, they just offer you a coffee, they just talk to you about everything, their whole life and... so it's really really better to really visit them than going to that fair. Anyway, I'm not going to Top Resa this year.
IR: You're not going?
IE: Well, I'm just going as visitor.
IR: Ah, okay.
IE: And just maybe have some appointments there to see some clients but we are not having a stand this year.
IR: Yeah. Well, then it doesn't make sense.
IE: No, it's not relevant to be frank.

IR: Yeah. Okay, that's very interesting because I think that's also quite different from the German market. What do you think about word of mouth? Do you think there's like kind of, I mean not like a network in the French market, but do you think it's important to French clients to hear, like what they, a reputation for example about a company? Or do you think that they are all quite by themselves and they don't know anything about us, or anyone else?

IE: It's kind of important. It's kind of important. I would say that French people are the first one to check on TripAdvisor for hotels for example.

IR: Yeah.

IE: And every time you just offer an hotel and the hotel is just like, you know three, only three out of five on TripAdvisor or something like that they come back to you saying “oh, the hotel is not very well, you have more on TripAdvisor”, so they are the first ones you know.

IR: Okay, okay.

IE: Then there is a very tough competition. And they are not really friends with each other. So would say that it's the opposite. If you are working with their competors, they are not working with you, because the competitor is working with you. So you have to be really careful. That's the case. For example we have two clients in the East of France that are the biggest clients in the East of France. So we have (...) Voyages and we have (...) and we have been chosen by (...) which is a very old traditional fashion things you know, it's (...) we have been chosen. And (...) knows we are working with (...), so we were working with (...) before working with (...) but since we are working with (...) it's not working with us anymore. Because, yeah, because we are gonna offer the same things, same hotel that (...) is offering, so they want another supplier, to be like original and just like not having the same thing than (...) has.

IR: Okay, that’s difficult.

IE: Yeah, that's really difficult. But because things are not going very well with (...) we have decided not to, like, to work with (...). But it's just like, that's how it is. And they are always asking you “are you working with (...) because if you're working with them, I'm not gonna work with you, you know”. So you have to be really careful when you are just saying you know... that's the reason why it's kind of tricky, you know usually we don't say who we are working with, or just saying we are working with this, and not saying like the name. Because they are so much in competition, there are so much competition in France. It's the case of cultural things as well. We have (...) that we are working with and we have another agency that is called (...) and they are specialized in cultural trips, so only like ten people, but really cultural, you know really into the matter you know. And as we are working with (...) we cannot work with (...) because it's just like, yeah.

IR: Do these companies then also, like they also interested in completely different products then?

IE: Yeah!

IR: And they just want to be different then.
IE: They want to be different from the competitors. And they just say “if we work with them, we’re gonna have the same hotels, because we have our suppliers”. And that’s true because we are gonna offer the same hotels. So they want another supplier with our hotel to be like different and just like...

IR: That’s very interesting.

IE: Mh-mhm...

IR: Do you hold any presentations when you visit clients, or do you just go there for meetings?

IE: We’re not doing that at the moment. We’re not doing presentations, but we would like to do that because we have some of our coach operators working with us. They are doing like a brochure, and every year for example they are doing a kind of presentation to all the senior association and just like you know they invite all the seniors director or the senior association or workers association to come. And they just introduce all the destination things, all the products that are in their brochure. So we would definitely like to help, so we’re going to offer them to come to those days and we are just like trying to find which companies are doing that. Just to go there or to send VisitBritain, or just to help to sell the destination. But at the moment we are not doing that. I know the Germans are doing, but we are not doing it. But the thing is that the French market is totally different as well because we don’t have like big clients as the German market has. They have very big clients. We don’t have big clients. And you don’t have big clients in France because everybody is just doing everything, you know.

IR: Yeah.

IE: You don’t have a specialist of Great Britain that is just doing everything for everybody in France for Great Britain, no. Everybody is dealing with everything.

IR: With everything, yeah.

IE: So you have like, 800 medium clients or 800 small clients, but you don’t have like big clients.

IR: Yeah.

IE: So, just like, it could be good to go and make some presentations, but the thing is that you know that it’s not going to be like... is it really worth it in a way? Because you’re gonna spend like on day travelling, plus one day for (not understandable) coming back. And then at the end you’re gonna have like, one trip... so is it worth it?

IR: Yeah. Forgot what I wanted to ask... Do you think that the French prefer... I mean I don’t know how you communicate, via phone or email? But what’s the response time, do they like to talk to you via email or rather have a phone call?

IE: Phone calls are important, definitely. Phone calls because it’s just like you’re saying in 30 seconds what you want to say.

IR: Yeah, exactly.

IE: Phone calls are really important. They just call you to say “oh blablabla, okay thank you” and that’s it. Because writing emails is sometimes longer and then obviously when you write email you’re just starting to, you know “hello, I hope you are fine blablabla”.

65
IR: Yeah, time consuming.

IE: You just like think about it, so it just takes more time. So French people are more into phone calls, very quick things.

IR: But also not too often then, right?

IE: Not too often.

IR: Yeah, no chasing.

IE: No chasing at all.

IR: Is there any main difference with regards to price and products. Depending on how familiar you are with the German market or booking behavior in general, when do they book, is it early, late? What’s the price range? I mean, I’m sure there is differences, so whatever is...

IE: They are really into pricing. They are really into pricing. And the thing is that for example, there are, okay, so you have first of all you have the end clients. The end clients just like a senior association or worker association, you know. They are just having a meeting and just like “what can we do this year, we have heard that Scotland could be nice”, “that could be nice, we could offer Scotland”, “yeah, but also Iceland is quite popular at the moment, you know”, “yeah, yeah, Iceland is quite good as well”. And then after that they have like three or four different destinations. They are not fixed, they are never fixed on one destination. They are (not understandable). So they just come to the agency, and they just say “oh, we would like to go to Iceland…” and they just like. And then they go to another agency, and then they go to another agency. So they just most of the time ask three different agencies. And the three different agencies are going to ask three different incomings as well.

IR: Okay...

IE: So for one request, you have like nine different offers that are to be generated. Sometimes we notice that because we just receive the same things coming from two agencies, and exactly the same thing. So we know that they are in competition and we know that… so usually we just tell them. We do not say which agency is in competition, you know that you are in competition with somebody or that because we received several requests for that, so we just tell them. But yeah, so at the end you have like three different clients, I mean three different agencies, three different suppliers, so that’s the reason why we have a conversion rate that is very low.

IR: Yeah.

IE: So in this case, you have to be the best because of course you are in competition with all your competitors, and you have to. So that’s the reason why, yeah, rates are very important, definitely. Then after the use of booking, definitely they are pretty late.

IR: Mm-mmm...

IE: French people they are quite like, how can I say that, it’s just like, they are really worried about everything. And it was not the case before, but I think because of what happened in Paris, the attacks everything and all those things because we are quite touched by that as well. No they are just waiting till the very late moment that everything is okay.
IR: Okay.

IE: And at the moment for an example, I know that the German team is working a lot on 2019. At the moment we are still working on September, October, November, December 2018. And we have, are still receiving some requests for May and June now.

IR: That’s very soon.

IE: We are, yeah, we are still receiving for the summer, so they are really late definitely, really late.

IR: Yeah, that’s very late.

IE: Really late. We haven’t worked a lot... I was checking this morning, we have 94 offers pending at the moment, so meaning that we have sent the offers and we are waiting for the customer to come back to us saying I book or not. So we have 94 pending, 64, no, 98, 98, 64 are for 2018, 34 are for 2019. Can you imagine? We are in April. We still have, like most of the requests that are still for the actual year. That’s amazing, definitely.

IR: Yeah, yeah. And very different from Germany. That they’re not in 2023 is surprising...

IE: Yeah!

IR: And the products they buy? Do you think, I mean you said, you talked a lot about food and they wanna take their time and yeah, I mean what’s maybe the average length of the tours they book, or where do they mainly go, what destination?

IE: Mhm, they don’t like to be out for a long time from their place. So they are going for shorter trip more and more. Usually they like cultural things, apart of the workers association because, so that’s something you have as well, to you know separate. Because you have like the senior association, the senior association they really want something cultural, they don’t want to be left on their own, and they want a guide for the whole trip, they want to visit many things, they want to stop for you know having like a proper lunch, proper dinner, being all together because they are not living together, they are not seeing each other you know.

IR: Yeah.

IE: They are just a club or an association. But the workers association they have different use of travelling, totally different use of travelling. Because those ones, they are seeing each other every day. They are working with each other every day. So when the company is organizing something for them, they don’t want to be with the others, they are seeing them every day. So they are just going, but they want to have the free weekend, you know. They just want like okay, the transportation, the hotel and then they do whatever during the day, so it’s totally different. They don’t want the same thing, those two don’t want, for example, the workers association because they want a free weekend, they want to be intern, right in the center. Because they are doing things like themselves so they don’t feel like travelling for like 30 minutes to go somewhere. or, they want to be intern. The seniors, it’s totally different, because they are just running from one place to the other, the whole day. They don’t like being intern, because they like something quiet. They want a hotel quiet that is not really intern because they will have dinner at the hotel, they will be totally exhausted, so they will stay in the hotel, they are not going out.
IR: Yeah, yeah...

IE: So it's totally different regarding product as well, we have both of it. So we have like hotel in the centers for younger and workers, and we have hotels around for the seniors. The seniors they want hotels that are just like, really good as well because they are going to spend time in the hotel, so they want more things. The workers they don't mind about the hotel because it's just sleep and they are young.

IR: Yeah.

IE: They don't mind. Just a basic (not understandable), like hotel chains or something in the center. The seniors they want something more traditional because they are going to spend time in the hotel, so they don't want a hotel chain because a hotel chain you can have everywhere. Something more traditional.

IR: So it's very important to distinguish between these two groups as well.

IE: That's really important for the beginning.

IR: So the clients, the travel agencies or coach operators, so these two that you mentioned are the end clients, right?

IE: Yeah!

IR: So the travel agencies, do they sell to both? Or do they focus on one?

IE: Most of the time they sell to both. Some of them are specialized in one or the other, but we know our clients and that's something we just like ask them straight away. Including when we are developing new businesses we just say "are you working with seniors or are you working with workers" and they say "oh mostly seniors or, but we have also some workers associations" you know. They are just like, something we keep because it's very important because you are not going to promote the same things. So definitely you have to, you know...

IR: ...distinguish, yeah.

IE: Yeah, and also when we have a request that is coming, and we are qualifying the request, we just ask it straight away because we are not going to put the same product for...

IR: Yeah.

IE: ...seniors or for workers, definitely.

IR: And, when for example a client, if we say potential clients, not a client that works with us yet, what do you think. how do they, how do they look our, ... how do they look for incoming agencies they could work with? Do you think they just do research online, or do they, yeah what do they...

IE: The end clients you mean, or the travel agencies?

IR: No, the travel agencies.
IE: The travel agencies usually they... I think historically, the ones we are working with for a long time, if they are happy with them they just request them. Then after that, the ones that are selling, the one that we have visited as well, the ones, they are not especially looking for somebody, they are just waiting for people to come, you know. If they have like two contacts, if they are working with Jac, and they are working with E-Voyages, they are not going to look to find somebody else you know. They are already the partner, so they... unless you just come and you just call them, and they are like ‘ah yeah, but next time I will ask you as well’ and the next time they just ask you as well.

IR: Okay.

IE: And it’s kind of you have to have the best product when they just come like that. But, I first, no they will not look for, you know, somebody else if they already have their partner.

IR: Yeah, yeah. And what do you, is there any companies that let’s say, I’m always thinking how do they, if there’s like a start-up or like a new young company, I don’t know if there are any, how do they look for us, how do they find us, where can they find us? Where do they look, you know what I mean?

IE: There is, I think there is nowhere, apart from trade shows as well, just going into that part and just like say ‘ah this one, I don’t know this one’ you know, and just like... But to be frank, having gone to Top Resa, at the end of the day, we were just looking how many clients we had seen. Most of the clients we had seen were just like clients we already knew.

IR: Yeah! Okay, yeah.

IE: So if it’s a new company, I suppose that they will go, you know that there is the newsletter, the DMC newsletter that you can receive? I can transfer this one to you, yeah that is an incoming newsletter and I suppose – from France – and I suppose they just like registering and just having all the, everybody is registered on that, so then after that you just like make some, you know research on the internet and just... but yeah.

IR: Do you think the French are big on internet? Social media, anything?

IE: Yeah.

IR: Also doing the research about Hotels and stuff...

IE: Yeah, quite. They are really keen on internet, yeah, definitely. That’s the first, I mean generally speaking.

IR: Yeah, yeah.

IE: When you’re just talking – that’s something I do not see with people here –

IR: Yeah...

IE: ... but generally speaking with my friend, you’re just like having a talk. And just like “oh but I think it was like, on” and then just take the phone and just check everything you know. “Ah yeah but it’s open, yeah, yeah, it’s in that place you know” and just like, it’s really internet, always. It’s just like part of the... yeah.
IR: Yeah. Do you think there are any other factors that influence the French market, such as politics or cultural, or structure of travel agencies, anything?

IE: A lot. Political. I can tell you that I was really, really upset was the French president when the Brexit happened. Because for, it's just an example but after the Brexit happened, after the vote, he just had an (not understandable), you know just had his pitch to French people on TV.

IR: Yeah...

IE: And he just said that he was just encouraging French people not to go to England anymore.

IR: I didn't see that. That is... funny.

IE: And I was in front of my TV, and I was just so angry. Because it has nothing to do, it has nothing to do. I mean it's just like, I was really angry, it has nothing to do, definitely.

IR: Yeah.

IE: And I was just like, ah people will not hear about that and will not listen to that, but yeah, they are doing. It's just like the business is still down because of that, so... not only because of that, but just like... And also when you have like the year of the vote for the president, people they are not travelling, unless they just waiting to see who the new president is gonna be. Because they have some money saved for travel but just in case the new president that is gonna come, you know, he's putting, going to put some taxes, you know new taxes and we will have to use that money saved and we have to wait for the president that is coming to see who it's gonna be. Cause you know, maybe we will not be able to travel this year. So yeah, definitely that's so funny and all the people in French tourism they know that the year will be crap when you have some general election for president.

Because nobody will travel because everybody is just like "mhm we don't know who it's gonna be" you know.

IR: Yeah, yeah.

IE: "So we have to save our money because maybe the new president is gonna be really into taxes and we're gonna be like so mhm..." and that's really, really funny. Then after that, yeah regarding politics as well. For the Brexit for example we have lost a lot of revenue because of the Brexit.

Because, the seniors for example, they have had parents that were just like you know, doing the Second World War or they were into it themselves, depends. The thing is that after that they just realized that hate is really bad, it's a really bad thing and we all have to be friends, you know. And the Brexit for them is just a kind of, England has just betrayed them, because we are all friends.

IR: Yeah.

IE: We are all friends, and we just have to be all together for what happened during the Second World War never happens again. So we really have to be all friends and stick together. And the fact that England decided to go out of Europe for them it's just like "oh, they are a traitor, they are not friends anymore". They are not looking at the fact that, you know, it's just like something administrative or... no, for them they are break up and it's just like it doesn't have to happen because we all have to be friends. And all that you know is just like really, really interfering with their way of travelling and they will not go, at the moment they are not going to that country because of that. Because they have really lived that, you know, they were just there, or their parents, they were just (not understandable). They have been traumatized, they just want to, you know, they're into peace and they just want everybody... to be friends and just be together, so that kind of thing is just like... And it's just like because they are not happy, you know. It's not like, you know when I could understand what they are doing, or, but do you just like...

IR: Yeah, that's what that was actually what I was... Do you think they are properly informed about why this happened and what happened?

IE: No. No. The only thing they are seeing is just like, you can see on TV. And the problem is that the French media are very, very bad, really, to be frank. And it was the case for example after I think it was one of the attacks that were there and... it was not a terrorist attack, something happened, it was just like somebody was stabbed, but it was not a terrorist attack. But in France it was shown as a terrorist attack, even... but it was shown after like 30 minutes when it happened. I think it was, no if was not like, it was – can you remember – it was a coach that was going into a bus and had an accident...

IR: A truck?

IE: Or a truck that had an accident.

IR: I don't really remember.

IE: Yeah, it was just after the attacks.

IR: Okay, yeah and then media pushed it.

IE: The coach went into the crowd but it was just because of the poor guy, you know, he had no breaks anymore on the coach and just came into... And in England nothing was said because you know people were just like doing and nothing was said regarding that. It was just like kind of matter of fact, just saying 'a coach have gone into the crowd, we don't know why', you know. But 30 minutes after: 'New attacks, new terrorist attacks in England and France!'

IR: Yeah.

IE: And after that, the government here said "no, it's not a terrorist attack, it's just that the poor guy had no breaks on the coach and just like tried to stop the coach wherever he can for the people that were outside, you know". But nothing was denied in France, it was too late. It just did like that and it has been shown like that and...

IR: Huge influence.

IE: Yeah. Huge influence in France. Really, really, really. And they are just like forming everything and they are just, you know, every day to keep on, you know. That is something that is very strange, I discovered when I arrived here. I was so used when something happened in France to have it, you know. Even when the finger is just dying, you know – you have it, you know, at lunch on the news, you have it at dinner on the news, you have a special edition in the afternoon and you have it, and you have it, and you have it for 14 days, you know like that. And at one point you are just in front of your TV and you're just like 'ah, ah, ah', you know. Kind of... But in England it's not the same. Something happened, they just talk about it once and then come back to it because it has been some progress, there has been something new regarding that and they just want to keep. But it's not like special edition, and it's... in France it's really (not understandable). And the people that are just like watching TV the whole day, that's just like, you know, as the senior for example, they are not working anymore, so they have not seen else than TV, are really influenced by that.

IR: Yeah, so you would say also an image of a country that probably those people also have a certain image in their head and as soon as something small happens, it can like ruin their whole...

IE: Exactly.

IR: And then... okay, wow. Okay. It's probably similar in other countries, but that's extreme. I don't know, but...

IE: I don't think so it's similar, to be fair. I mean I don't know all the countries, France and here it's not the same, you can watch the news without being traumatized, or really depressed.

IR: Yeah, that's true.

IE: In France when you watch the news... I was not watching the news anymore when I was living in France. You just watch the news, you are totally depressed, you just feel like committing suicide after the news because it's just so, you know, pushing, pushing, pushing. And it's not objective at all.

IR: Not objective, no.

IE: Not objective at all. And you know that you have the channel that is more into the labor forces and it's just like, you know, emphasizing the (not understandable) and you have the channel that is more into the conservative part that is just like showing things in that way and it's just like, really...

IR: That's a very good point to take into account. Is there anything that, any bottlenecks or problems that you see with regards to promoting for the French market? Anything that you would like to change, add, adjust...?

IE: Within the company you mean, or generally speaking?

IR: Yes. Or generally speaking, doesn't matter.

IE: No, within the company I just think that we are not visiting clients enough. We are trying our best, but we are only two visiting clients. And we have France, Belgium, Switzerland which is a lot.

IR: Yeah.

IE: So Anais is in France and she's visiting clients but I'm here, I'm dealing with the team, I have all the reports to do, so I cannot go on a regular basis, I'm just trying. I was trying to go every month but I cannot, so last time I went and visited clients was in January and I'm going next week. So... I'm not going next week, next month, sorry. So it was like four months without, so Anais is just visiting clients alone, but the thing is that in one week you visit like 11, 12 clients because they are not that close to each other (not understandable), so it's not a lot. I mean if you want to develop to a market very quickly, you just have to have more of that, so...

IR: And those are clients we don't work with yet?

IE: Yeah.
IR: Okay.

IE: What Anais and I are doing are clients we don’t work with yet. For the existing clients, we are — if they’re close to where we are going — we are visiting them as well. But normally Solene/Helene are the ones who should be visiting them, but I think Vera has changed her mind regarding that, but I have to check. Normally that’s how it should be.

IR: Yeah. Okay.

IE: So yeah, definitely that’s something we, if you want to grow the business something, we need to do.

IR: Yeah, okay. If there is nothing, I mean from my side that’s all I wanted to, I wanted to retrieve. If there is anything you would like to add, or that comes to your mind.

IE: No, I think it’s okay, yeah.

IR: Perfect. And yeah that was it. I think we talked quite a lot. Thank you very much for taking the time and for all the information and it will definitely help me.

IE: Hope I will help.

IR: Thank you, Marie Laure.

IE: You’re welcome.
Interviewer (IR): Luisa littemeyer
Interviewee (IE): Vera Leit, Commercial Director at Hotels & More

Interview number: 2

IR: Thank you, Vera, for taking the time to have the interview with me today. First of all, before we start, I would like to ask for your permission to use your results, your statements and to record the results, to record the whole interview basically.

IE: Yes, I'm okay with that.

IR: Perfect. I don't need to introduce myself because you know me. Now you also know what the project will be about: we want to look into the French market and what they require with regards to promotions, communication, how they want to be approached, what they want to see, and how they want to basically, how we reach them. Now the duration should be approximately an hour, could be a little less, could be a little more. The goal of the interview is basically to get insight into different aspects of a promotional plan with different components and especially focusing on typical characteristics for the French market. What we do, what you think should be done differently and also may be compared to the German market. Yes, and I would just like to start off with a short introduction by yourself about your role, how involved you are in the French market and what exactly you do.

IE: Well, I'm the Commercial Director for Hotels & More, and obviously with the acquisition and the growth of the company being now Tour Partner Group, we are not only Hotels & More, but we also consist of different other brands. I'm responsible for Sales and Marketing and the French department is one of the departments in the Sales where I am responsible for.

IR: Perfect. Thank you. May I start off with a general question—because we do know that all the markets are handled quite in the same manner—what do you think, or to what extent do you think does the French market vary from others, for example, the German market?

IE: Well, I've just... maybe what is interesting for the understanding of our organisation is that we were founded in Germany and 80% of our business is still coming from Germany, or even more than that, and the other markets were added to the mix slowly after when we became, or when we moved to England, and now cover a more international portfolio of our markets. What is interesting is that the mindset and the structure as well as the processes were all laid for the German market and to service the German market, but we have realized in the last year or so with the growth as well that you can't apply the same methods or procedures or behaviour on all the other source markets. However, as we see that French or France has a good growth potential for us, we obviously now need to look into what we need to do differently in order to get the business from those markets and the partnerships and the relationships with the players in those markets.

IR: So when you say they need to be handled differently and they are very different, what do you say would be typical characteristics for the French clients?

IE: I mean one thing is already the booking behaviour. I mean when you just look into how much in advance they plan their trip and how organized they are, I mean—don't quote me wrong on that one—but Germans for example, our German clients, book up to a year and a half in advance and they are... very. I mean they know what they want, or when you have decided with them on a certain itinerary, they would book that itinerary. They also have some smaller changes, but whereby the French markets normally it's more last minute, so it sometimes has happened that they book three months or two months before departure, and also have quite a lot of changes to be made after that. Another thing would be to look at the itineraries themselves: French market typically normally wants like city breaks etc., so that's like especially London is one of the characteristics, or one of their key destinations they want to see, big cities in the UK or Ireland. The other thing is, when you look at the structure of the itinerary is that a German person for example doesn't need for example a lunch, or like a three course whereby a French person wants a lunch break...

IR: Food...

IE: Yes, food is very very important. But also it's a German person loves to go to museums and all historical sights whereby a French person, I mean obviously you have to have the key must see into the itinerary, but they also would prefer just to go into Madame Tussauds or something like a bit more funny or like, Harry Potter is for example a really important theme whereby you don't have that in every German itinerary for example.

IR: Yeah, that's actually very helpful for looking at the products that they buy and especially the point in time that they buy is quite different. Now with regards, when we look at the promotional mix itself, advertising—online and print. You mentioned before that there is a brochure which was only recently made the first one. How do you think is online advertisement and print advertisement for the French marker?

IE: I think it's important to look into this. I mean we haven't done much in the past about this. I mean as you just mentioned, our French brochure is. I think we are in the third year now or second year now that we produce a... I mean we produced the second one, so for 2018 now, and it's very clear, we feel that it's important for the market to have something print. And for, with regards to press and media for example in France, we haven't done much yet, so it would be really important to explore what kind of impact that could have on our business.

IR: Yeah. So do you think Internet, social media would play a big role... in general do you think they are actively looking for information before they book?

IE: Yes. I mean they would need information before they would consider to book a certain itinerary or a certain destination. But it's also obviously with all what is published on the media, whether it's being negative or positive. I think they are very receptive to that. So we haven't done that much about this yet, but I mean just when you just see about the negative press, about the attacks in London or something, I mean it was all over the media and all over social media in France, and we could see an impact on the numbers after that, so I guess it's very important to look into especially social media, but also all online channels as well as TV and potentially even radio as well.

IR: Yeah. You mentioned PR and media, in general I've realized that the French people are very much strongly reacting to what's told in the media. Do you think they are properly informed about the destinations that they book, or do you think they are very much influenced by the media and then just basically say 'I'm not going to that destination', or do they ask, do they inform themselves? What do you think?

IE: I think they are very influenced by the media. And it's even more important that from our end we do kind of an educational work about the destination because I mean if you go to France, it's quite interesting, we went to a sales trip last year—I mean we go on a regular basis, but I joined a trip last year — where, when you speak to someone about England, the first thing that comes up is London. And it’s quite interesting to see the reaction when you would educate them a little bit more about other destinations, there are also other cities around the UK...

IR: Yeah!

IE: ... where they could do a trip to and what they could do. And I think in social media or if we would use social media or any other online platform more, we potentially would have a chance to sell other destinations or the entire destination more.

IR: Yeah. So sales trip to France you said. Do you think that meetings in person are very important?

IE: Yes, definitely. I mean it’s meetings in person, but also I mean being in contact with the clients on a constant or a frequent basis. Because also it’s the competition is quite high and it’s very price sensitive the market, so if you don’t, they are not as, it’s very difficult to build up a loyal relationship within the market, so the more present you are, and the more — whether it’s in person, whether it’s on the phone, whether it’s through social media or any other media channel, whether it’s online, whether it is, I mean in general being present — it makes an impact on how many bookings, what kind of relationship we have with the client.

IR: So you think for them it’s important to have a relationship, do you know, to have met you basically?

IE: Yeah!

IR: Trade shows — what do you think about trade shows?

IE: I think it’s important to both. But I mean there is only one, I mean for us which is really relevant in France, which is Top Resa in September in Paris. And I think it’s definitely good to be there and to meet the clients who are attending obviously and showface and be present on those.

IR: Okay. So, personal selling — when we talk about trade shows and sales trips — do you think, what do you think is the main way of communication that they would like? Is it on the phone, is it email, what’s the contact frequency, what do you think in general?

IE: I think the key important things is in person. And then obviously being, staying in contact with them on a regular basis. I mean, one thing we have a little bit changed already, we have one person in France now who’s doing business development and going there in person, because via phone they will not tell you, or they will potentially not give you the business without having seen you in person.

IR:Yeah...

IE: And from the frequency point of view, I mean at least once, twice a month you should get in contact with a client.

IR: Yeah, yeah. How many team members are there in the French team now?

IE: (counting quietly) Six. Six including intern.

IR: And one in France.
IE: Yeah.

IR: Okay.

IE: But then this is only at Hotels & More side, so obviously we have a team in Ireland and we have a team in Scandinavia as well, dealing with the same market.

IR: Yeah. What do you think what role does pricing play?

IE: It’s crucial, it’s important, because they are very price sensitive. I mean there is a combination of having a great offer, but then, I mean for example in, when you just use London, they always want to stay in a central location where they can walk and do shopping etc. whereby it needs to be cheaper as well which sometimes can be challenge.

IR: Yeah, yeah. What else do we have? What distinguishes the market... How, how open do you think are they to communication in other languages?

IE: I think they want French as a language because a lot of them don’t speak much any other languages, or if they do they are often scared to make mistakes etc, so they prefer to speak in their own language. Some of them speak English obviously, but...

IR: Yeah... Do you think there are any factors that influence the French market? I mean we talked a little bit about that they are easily influenced by the media, so that might be a cultural thing, or I mean economic, because of, or political because of what’s happening, what do you think is, or is there any other factor that you can think of that influences them?

IE: I mean media definitely is a key thing. And, I mean everything which is pushed in the market, whether it’s the weather or whether it’s political, I mean price is important, so I think there are quite a few things which influence the market, and also really quickly influence the market. So, and the government for example had a few student groups from France as well, and when the attacks happened in London, the government had all the universities, all the colleges had idea, in France, had after were not allowed to do any trips to the UK just because of safety. And, I mean you can see that has quite a big impact on the business straight away, yeah.

IR: Yeah.

IE: But also I mean their culture in general is quite...

IR: Their culture in general is very different. Also the reason why they might have to be handled differently. What do you think are general bottlenecks or problems with regards to promoting for the French market? General issues, challenges...

IE: I mean its, it comes a bit back from, it’s a summary of all what we have said, I mean it’s price, it’s the destination, it’s what you can offer, how fast we react, how often you reach out to them. The point of contact, or the relationship needs to be there as well. But then also, the market itself, I mean when you look at the media channels and all the influences they have on a day to day basis: I mean they are very easily influenced, so you need to be there, and you need to be all over them in order to get the business.

IR: Yeah, you need to be the expert to inform.
IE: Yeah, exactly.

IR: Crisis management. From my side there is nothing else that I want to know. Is there anything you would like to add?

IE: Well, I just mean I'm quite curious to see what the result out of the thesis is to get an idea of what we can be doing better, in order to get more business out of the market, especially as it is quite a unique interesting market to work with. And also how we can use potentially media and online better in order to yeah, to increase sales out of it.

IR: Yeah, yeah, perfect.

IE: Thank you!

IR: Word of the day. Thank you, Vera, and just to make sure again: it is okay we use the recording and your name and the results?

IE: Yes, that's perfectly fine.

IR: Perfect, thank you.

IE: Thank you!

6.7.3 Melody Fournelle
Interview promotional activities at Hotels & More
Harrow, April 23rd 2018, 20:00 min.

Interviewer (IR): Luisa Lütkemeyer
Interviewee (IE): Melody Fournelle, Operations Consultant at Hotels & More
Interview number: 3

IR: Hello Melody. Thank you very much for taking the time and to talk to me today. I'm assuming this will take maximum 30 minutes depending on what we talk about, what you could tell me. First of all, I mean you know me, Luisa. I am conducting interviews for field research for a project of the French market, specifically promotional plan. And first of all I would like you to confirm that it's okay that we record this interview and that I use your name.

IE: It's fine.

IR: Perfect, thank you. So I want to find out is how the French market, what typical characteristics are, what they like to book, when they book, what's important to them, maybe some cultural aspects, what you think is important for the French market. Maybe you could...

IE: Just for the UK destination?

IR: For the UK as a destination, yeah.

IE: The only thing I could say, cause as I say I'm in Operations, so I don't actually promote anything. I don't sell anything, I just organise what's sold. I would say what I know is they book last minute. They like, they prefer that thing because of money reasons. And maybe a lack of – how can I say – oorganisation, you know they never really. It's always quite last minute.

IR: Yeah!

IE: So yeah. What else could I say, I don't know.

IR: Have you had any experience with other markets before?

IE: Instead of French, or instead of…?

IR: Yes, instead of French.

IE: Yeah, in like in a former company I worked for, I worked with different nationalities. And now I'm actually working with Spanish, Danish, Norwegian, Swedish.

IR: Ah, because of the acquisition as well?

IE: Yeah, because we need more staff, so I'm helping for sure. You could think it's different, but you know it always depends. It's hard to say because we have clients who are very organised and you know, others who are not, so it's difficult.
IR: Yeah. So do you know anything about the advertisement that Marketing does, for example newsletters, the brochure or any other material that the clients want? Do they request anything with you, or do they request with Sales, or how does that work?

IE: With sales, we don’t do that at all.

IR: With sales.

IE: I’m not really aware of what they do. Randomly sometimes I receive a phone call saying they are interested by a flyer. Then Sales sends, but I’m always forwarding back to Sales because I just don’t know how to work with it.

IR: Yeah! How many people are you in Operations for the French?

IE: Two.

IR: Two people.

IE: Yeah.

IR: How many clients are there that you’re handling?

IE: Clients… it’s hard to say. In high season we have 35 groups. And it can go from, you know one group could be just a hotel booking to a tour of 7, 14 days. 14 days is a big one, but it could happen.

IR: Yeah. Yeah.

IE: So yeah, it’s… it really depends.

IR: And how do you think, I mean without looking at the season or anything, during the time that they travel – I’m not… I don’t know anything about emergency phones or anything – but is there anything during their travels that they are famous for, that they… do they complain a lot, do they change last-minute as you said, do they… yeah, any typical…?

IE: So they don’t change on the spot as much as other nationalities. So they’re pretty respectful, like of the tour. The only thing they could complain of is the food. Very important. They always complain about the food, and even if they don’t complain – cause at the end of each tour we call the agency and ask if they had any feedback – and often, even if they don’t complain us for compensation or anything, they will say ‘oh, the food was bad’.

IR: Yeah, yeah.

IE: So it happens quite often, but we do tell them, Sales tells each agencies that obviously they can’t, they don’t travel to the UK for the food. And that’s why for example small details, but for the bread. It’s like part of our culture, right, to have bread on tables?

IR: Yeah, yeah.

IE: And we had to write a note on the contract saying that bread is not part of the culture.
IR: No way.

IE: Yeah, and so they, they couldn’t, you know if they want bread on tables, they would have to pay a supplement for it because many restaurants are not offering bread on tables, but for them it’s completely logical, so yeah.

IR: It’s a culture thing.

IE: It’s a cultural thing, yeah. For sure.

IR: Can’t blame them, right?

IE: No no no, but... and there are many other things. I mean about food it’s (not understandable).

IR: Yeah, it’s all about food for the French, I’ve heard that so many times, IE: It’s very important, and sometimes they have like 3-course lunch, 3-course dinner every day, so you know, they like spending time like in a restaurant. But UK is quite hard sometimes. London mostly cause, you know, obviously French people want to have a bit cheap tour, they have a cheap, not a big budget. Then afterwards they want the quality. So the problem we have is that Sales is making the cheapest budget ever and then we have to book quite good quality restaurants, but we can’t do that sometimes.

IR: Yeah, it has to be balanced, right?

IE: Yeah, yeah. So it’s quite hard sometimes, but I’m always trying to book good pubs or restaurants without any complaints. I mean I could talk about food all day...

IR: So it’s apparently a big thing in any, in all of the tours they are very much focused on food.

IE: It is. Even the agency is a good one, they will tell them, and they know what they’re doing. They will tell them “look, come to the UK, but enjoy the culture and you know, like pub culture or like, architecture, people like anything, but not the food, we don’t want you to complain about it” and yeah.

IR: So you do think that the agencies that it’s their job also to make the end clients aware of that the UK is not really...?

IE: I think so. Because I did talk to some of my clients who were promoting the tour and travelling with them, so smaller agencies, I will always remember one of them told me that when everyone is registering, she explains that fact. And when she had problems on spot because you know, the quality wasn’t good, she will, you know, tell them “look, like at least you know what the culture, pie or fish and chips which is not properly cooked because it’s not a superior pub, it’s just like a drinking pub”. And they will laugh about you know, like she will always know how to manage. And some clients, some agencies they’re like selling it like it was Italy or you know, Obviously if French people go to Italy, they go to restaurants and have lovely pasta, pizza and come here and get disappointed. I’m not saying English food is bad, I actually enjoy it, but the problem is... no, I... I actually do.

IR: You do? That’s great!
IE: I actually do, but I don’t go to some pubs because I know the quality is bad and I’m not gonna enjoy it. And the problem is, again, because of the budget, I have actually to book my groups in these pubs, and because of the size as well of the group. It could be 50 people, so find a pub for 50 people, it’s quite hard for 50 people. But some, yeah...

IR: It’s actually very interesting because it was mentioned several times that they are often also... I mean if agencies are not aware of the food quality and then the end clients will be disappointed in the end that’s probably lost business for the next time, so...

IE: It is, it is.

IR: Yeah, informing maybe about the destination is a big thing in general. Do you think that French, not only agencies, suppliers, but any like end clients, are properly informed of what the culture is like in the UK and Ireland? What media shows them, do they have stereotypes?

IE: They do have stereotypes for sure.

IR: And they do believe a lot of the... if we talk about for example the attacks. Do you think Sales would go down? Did they go down when the attacks happened or?

IE: The what?

IR: In London. The attacks, the terror attacks... I think it was last year?

IE: Ah, the attacks, sorry terrorist attacks. Yeah, I did affect a bit the market, and as well not the fact it happened in London cause we didn’t have as many attacks as in France but just the fact it happened in France, people got just scared. It’s not just the UK, I think it was all around, no one wanted to really travel anymore. Plus, we have student groups and the French government, and I do believe a bit the Belgian government, forbid students to get out of the country. So even if the family were not scared and wanted to travel, they were not allowed to.

IR: Yeah...

IE: So that was a bit problem and that’s why... and yeah sometimes, some tours won’t cancel, but push back for the next year. But there wasn’t just one attack, it was several attacks, you know. I think it... people got used to it. It’s sad to say, but they were like “life goes on”.

IR: Yeah, exactly.

IE: It happens in our own country, so you know, we’re not safe anywhere. But, you know it’s not England which is a threat, it’s like everywhere. So it’s just enjoying and go and travel, so I think now it’s not really affecting anymore.

IR: But it’s allowed again, or?

IE: It is allowed, oh yeah, yeah. It is, it is, it is.

IR: Did they actually say “you can’t leave the country” or...?
IE: Yeah, they were, like the schools were informed and it was like a public thing where they couldn’t leave the country.

IR: So you would say media, or like the press it has a lot of influence on the people?

IE: Yeah, oh for sure. The press has an immense, big, big influence. I mean everyone in France is — for what I can remember —

IR: No worries.

IE: Is watching, you know, the 8pm news on TV, so everyone is aware of what’s going on.

IR: Yeah... which is also good...

IE: It is.

IR: But sometimes it can be a little pushed and made worse than it is.

IE: They believe whatever media is telling them, so sometimes it’s a bit annoying. But I do believe, TV is quite important and influencing the market and what they do and what they believe which could be goes in a good way and in a bad way...

IR: Yeah, exactly.

IE: But yeah.

IR: Are you in direct contact with agencies during the travel?

IE: If... well yeah, anytime, I mean if they have any questions they could contact me. And the end client could contact me as well if they have any issues. So I’m always in touch with the agent. But the end client is allowed to contact me while they are travelling because they have a phone number.

IR: Yeah. The language is probably only French?

IE: Only French.

IR: No English.

IE: Well, I mean it depends because last time I had a Filipino group and they speak English, so...

IR: Yeah, yeah, yeah. But for French people, do you think they are. I mean you said already they’re not the most organized - in general, I mean we’re not. I mean there’s always different people, but that they’re not the most organized ones — do you think, do they, are they insecure when travelling abroad or are they “off they go and you never hear from them” or are they... basically what are they like?

IE: I mean we usually have a guide or they are coming with a tour leader, so that helps a lot

IR: Yeah.
IE: When we have groups with no tour leaders which is booked by the agency or a guide of ours, it's annoying in a way because they are insecure and they will call for anything. But that's why it's always good to have a guide there, you know her or she is there for them and they will take care of them like, you know like the whole time. But it depends. I mean, there are clients where we only book a hotel and transfers, airport transfers and then free time, they do whatever they want. And I think they more like younger. And then we have the senior clients — clientele, don't know if it's an English one to say —

IR: Yeah.

IE: ... where, yeah I think they need a guide and they're not very secure. I heard some guide saying that, you know in Covent Garden it's not very hard to get lost, it's like a square...

IR: Yeah.

IE: With the market. And sometimes it's very hard for them. The guide will be like “okay, free time in Covent Garden, you have like 45 minutes” and some members of the group will stay with the guide because they're really worried, yeah.

IR: Aw, that's cute.

IE: Yeah, it's cute, but in a way it's sad. I mean it's like, you know it's England, it's Europe.

IR: Yeah, exactly.

IE: I do consider the UK as Europe, whatever we can say, but yeah, it's just yeah. It really depends.

IR: Also, you probably have to distinguish in general between the seniors and the... what do they — Marie Laure called it somehow — like the workers basically.

IR: Oh, yeah.

IE: Did she say workers, I don't remember. Yeah, so distinguish between the old, there is always different characteristics obviously. I'm not sure if you're familiar with pricing. You, you said they want cheap, cheap, cheap. Do you think they are willing to spend more money and get better quality, or would they rather save money and be okay with the food?

IE: I think they want to pay less and have better quality to be honest with you. It's hard, it's hard.

IR: I mean in general, who doesn't want that, right?

IE: No, I know, but I think they are more...

IR: ... price sensitive.

IE: Yeah, yeah like it. It's tough sometimes. It's hard to say, but that's what I thought, you know while working here. Cause I even had a client once say to me — because she was disappointed about restaurant and hotels — saying that she was ready to pay more for better quality and then I'm sure it's not the case, it's never the case. They say that after the tour, but at the end...

IR: Yeah, exactly. Sure.
IE: And it's tough, like the competition is big here in London. And the best way is the rates, so if it's not easy, it's really not easy.

IR: Okay, that's interesting. I think that was it.

IE: Don't know if I have anything else to say, but...

IR: You actually, you, that's a lot of information.

IE: Yeah?

IR: Yeah, a lot of good background information. You have nothing that you would like to add, anything else that comes to your mind?

IE: I mean just as the UK I mean it's still part of you know in the head they all know, I think everyone wants to go to London at least once. Maybe Scotland and Ireland, it's back the head (..), yeah you know what I mean, right?

IR: Yeah.

IE: But London for sure it's very famous. And we've, I mean don't buy all these newspaper, but you know like the – how do you call it – famous magazines where you can see famous people. You know like Gala...

IR: Yeah, yeah, yeah, I don't know what you call these.

IE: I can't remember, there is a name for sure. Anyway, that's a big thing in France.

IR: Yeah?

IE: Yeah, a lot of women, mostly women, not men, would buy these kind of newspaper. It's not newspaper, it's like...

IR: Magazines.

IE: Magazines, yeah magazines. As simple as that. And you will always see the Royal Family in these magazines. And I think they're quite interested by it, fascinated in a way. Because obviously we don't have a King and Queen in France anymore. And I think it's very exotic for them...

IR: Exotic, yeah.

IE: So they like it. So obviously when they come to London they wanna see Buckingham Palace and, you know it's, it's quite a thing, it's quite a thing.

IR: Yeah. But I mean that they could also see in Scotland, they have Royal residencies everywhere, but London is the biggest thing, right?

IE: Yeah, yeah.

IR: Also easily accessible from France cause I mean they are right there.
IE: It is. I mean there are some of them are just doing a day trip. It’s tiring, but they’re doing it. But I think just because of Buckingham, you know it’s, or Kensington Palace, very famous.

IR: I don’t know what, yeah, but like, yeah I know Gala. Yeah those magazines where it’s like “boom, boom, look at this”.

IE: People magazine.

IR: Yeah, yeah, people magazine, yeah.

IE: That’s a big thing, a lot of women are buying that. So that’s a big market as well.

IR: Perfect.

IE: Yeah, for sure.

IR: Do you think in general they still do buy a lot of print? Print like newspapers, or do you think more they read it on the internet, watch TV, like you said the 8pm show?

IE: TV has always been a big thing. I think it’s like a routine, it’s very easy, they can eat because we always eat at 6pm, right?

IR: So they can eat while watching?

IE: (... depends on the family. But they will always watch it.

IR: That’s hilarious.

IE: It’s like a tradition. I mean in my family that’s what it is anyway. But for newspaper I don’t know, it’s not a thing in my family, I’ve never seen it. And I think Internet...

IR: Rising, increasing.

IE: It’s available anywhere and it’s cheap, it’s free, so...

IR: Yeah, exactly.

IE: I can’t answer that. I just know TV and these people magazines.

IR: That’s a very good point.

IE: Which are working quite well.

IR: Thanks for adding that.

IE: No worries.

IR: And just to make sure again, I’m gonna use your name, the results and I’ll use your recording.

Thank you so much for taking the time.

IE: You’re welcome.

IR: And yeah, enjoy the rest of your day.

IE: Thank you.
6.7.4 Marie Belanger
Interview promotional activities at hotels & More
Harrow, April 24th 2013, 13:00 min.

Interviewer (IR): Luisa Lüttemeyer
Interviewee (IE): Marie Belanger, Sales Manager at Irish Welcome Tours (Dublin)

Interview number: 4

1. IR: Well, first of all, Marie, thank you very much for taking the time to talk to me. And firstly I would like to ask you if it’s okay for you to use the, yeah the recording of the interview and the results with your name in my thesis.

2. IE: Yeah, sure.

3. IR: Perfect, thank you. I mean, my, I mean yeah we don’t know each other, we never met each other. My name is Luisa, I am part of the Marketing Team at Hotels & More and I’m currently working on a project for the French market, mainly focused on promotion, so online, offline, where we are, what we do to reach our clients, our French clients.

4. IE: Okay.

5. IR: And Vera was so kind to give me your contact — or Bernadette’s contact and she was so kind to give me your contact, to yeah find out a little more about what you guys do and yeah, to look at how we can approach the market better, cause I’ve heard that you are the French experts. Maybe first of all, if you could shortly explain to me what exactly you do and how involved you are in the French market.

6. IE: So I’ve started to work as a Sales Manager for Irish Welcome Tours in January. So my role is to maintain, and also develop like relationships with the French clients in the French market and I also have to develop the business on the Spanish market as nobody worked on the Spanish market yet.

7. IR: Yeah.

8. IE: And so for French market, Bernadette was working on it basically on her own, so now we are going to share and she should keep like the historical clients and I’m going to take care of the new clients for the French market.

9. IR: Okay. Perfect, thank you. First of all, I would… just a general question: do you have a separate Marketing department at IWT?

10. IE: No, we don’t have any Marketing department.

11. IR: And is, things like for example — I’m not sure if you guys have a brochure, if you guys are represented in magazines, anything in print...

12. IE: No, we do no… like our brochure will be mostly of our website and then we are on the social media, such as Facebook, I think we are (asking colleagues) yeah we are on Twitter also.

13. IR: Okay.

14. IE: So Facebook and Twitter.

15. IR: Do you think that social media plays a big role for the French clients or do you think they don’t really use it a lot?

16. IE: French clients, they are using a bit, yeah a bit social media, not so much.

17. IR: Do you, when we talk about, you said that you also take care of the Spanish market...

18. IE: Yeah.
IR: What do you think are the biggest differences between the French and the Spanish with regards to booking, what they book, what they want to have in their tours, what do you think are typical characteristics?

IE: Yeah, the thing is that we can clearly say that the French people will have more budget than the Spanish. Then, for the differences, the French clients they like to have like the full package with all the activities included. Also, for French people the meals are very important.

IR: Yeah, food, yeah.

IE: Yeah, food is very important. So basically all the programmes, I mean for the guaranteed departures, all the programmes are basically on full board.

IR: Yeah.

IE: And it's true that French people do have a, a little bit more budget for compared to Spanish people and also compared to the German market.

IR: And do you think that – so you say that food plays a very important role – what would you think, because French clients, I mean you only handle Ireland, correct?

IE: Yes.

IR: So not the UK, so...

IE: No... (not understandable)

IR: What in Ireland do they mainly want to do, where do they mainly want to go?

IE: Connemara.

IR: Connemara...

IE: Of course. They want to go to Connemara you know because of the French song about the lakes of Connemara. So all the French people basically want to go to Connemara, it's mandatory for them.

IR: So...

IE: Because of the song is talking to them a lot. And they like to go also to the North, to the Giant's Causeway or Cliffs of Moher also, yeah.

IR: Yeah, and what about Dublin?

IE: Yeah, oh yeah, of course Dublin, yeah. Definitely, Dublin should be included. Because we do have a lot of requests for the weekend in Dublin, but it's not easy to sell because weekends in Dublin are very, very expensive.

IR: Yeah!

IE: And with all the events, live music we do have or sports events or so, and, but anyway yeah, for each itinerary they will stop by Dublin of course yeah, at the beginning or at the end of the itinerary, yeah.

IR: Okay, thank you. Then, I'm not sure, to what extent do you guys undertake any sales trips? Or do you have any representatives in France?

IE: No, no, no. We don't have any representatives anywhere. We are like, now Bernadette before she was working with Esther, a German girl, now Esther left, she moved to another company. So now since January Bernadette she has like a Sales team with Katie who is in charge of the Nordic Countries and the rest of the world. We do have Manta which is working with the German market, and myself on the French market and Spanish market and then Bernadette.

IR: That's also not a big team.
IE: So we are all based in Dublin and at least once per month we are going for a week to a Sales trip.
IR: Ah, okay, at least once per month. And then you meet potential clients or you meet existing clients?
IE: Both.
IR: Both, okay.
IE: Yeah.
IR: And it’s basically spread all over France? Or is there like an area where there are most?
IE: Yeah, no, no, it’s all over France because Paris, and then you will have East of France, North of France, so yeah it’s (not understandable) area, yeah.
IR: And do you think that these personal meetings are important to the clients?
IE: Yes, definitely because for example our competitors Abbey Tours, they do have like a (not understandable) based in France and we can see that, how can I say that, as I mean they are stronger as we do have somebody you know, based in France, but now also before it wasn’t so much politic of the company and Bernadette as she was alone, she couldn’t do everything, so now this is also the new, I mean something new, something new that our CEO wants us to do. So I mean for doing a Sales trip once per month.
IR: Yeah.
IE: And because of, for example, two weeks ago I went to Lyon and I met like some historical clients and they are working with us and it’s working very well. And you see she has not been visited for years, so like something like four, five years. So you see it’s a long time also, so we need to, we have to visit the historical clients, existing clients, yeah.
IR: Yeah. So personal contact...
IE: Because it is important to maintain the relationship.
IR: Yeah, yeah! Very good point. Do you think that there are any, any other factors that influence the French market, cultural or political or motivational? The end clients, if we talk about the end clients, what do you think motivates them to travel?
IE: So, basically I would say that French clients always have a good picture of Ireland, have been attracted by Ireland. Then is a safe country, so it’s not so far from France and you can easily fly from France to Ireland. You have several flights from Paris also from the countryside. So the access is quite easy, then the only problem if I can say will be the price.
IR: Yeah!
IE: Ireland is a bit too much expensive, but I mean, there are always, even if it’s quite difficult sometimes for the travel agents to sell Ireland, (not understandable) requests for Ireland, so the country has still a good picture for French people.
IR: Yeah. So you think that they have a stereotype in their head that it’s safe, that it’s nice to visit and which is very important to them?
IE: Yes, yeah definitely.
IR: And do you think that they are very easily influenced by the media? Let’s say if something happens, like it happened in London, do you think that French people are very receptive to that?
IE: Oh yeah, more and more since the attacks we got in Paris and in France, yeah.
IR: Yeah, so Ireland, tol tol tol.
IE: Yeah, I mean, you got now people are more and more worried about the attacks, so... and because we had a lot in France, now we are more careful. And also about the communication, we have like a very good Tourism Ireland office in Paris. And they are very good about communication. For example in February we did some adverts on TV, also in the subway and also can provide support for the travel agency, you know to put some decoration inside of the agency, things like that. So the team from the Tourism Ireland in Paris is very good.

IR: So they actively support you in basically representing the country, promoting?

IE: Yeah.

IR: Ah, okay.

IE: Yeah. For the promotion and also they can support you with (not understandable) funds, things like that yeah.

IR: That's interesting.

IE: Yeah.

IR: Do you think French people are in general TV watchers if you can say it like that?

IE: Yes, yeah because after my visit to France, first Sales trip you know, the following day I was talking with some travel agent and then also people talked a lot about this adverts on the TV. So yeah, as soon as you know (not understandable) something like seven or eight in the evening most of the time people are in front of the TV. With the news, the news are at eight, so, and then you have the movie which is starting, so yeah...

IR: Yeah, exactly. Is there anything that comes to your head with regards to characteristics for French people, how they travel, or how they search for information? Do you think it's more online, offline, yeah anything that you could think of?

IE: Right now...

IR: That's fine.

IE: I think that now people, but it's not maybe linked to that, that people are again booking, doing booking on last minute compared to before.

IR: Yeah. Yeah. No that's a very good point.

IE: So maybe you know it could be a good pop up for the head also. If they see something on the social media or on a, as an advert on the TV, it could influence them, yeah.

IR: Cool! Awesome, well that was it already. I found out things that I wanted to find out. Thank you very much for taking the time and for helping me...

IE: Yeah, is it okay? Are we done already?

IR: Yeah, that's perfectly fine.

IE: Ah okay great! I hope I'm gonna be good help for yourself.

IR: You definitely helped me a lot.

IE: Okay great. I'm happy for you.

IR: Thank you. Marie. Thank you. See you soon, bye bye.

IE: You're welcome. Luisa. Have a good day and good luck for your research.

IR: You too. Thank you, bye bye!

IE: Bye bye!
6.7.5 Anais Pogorzelski
Interview: Promotional Activities at Hotels & More

Harrow, April 25th 2018, 24:00 min.

Interviewer (IR): Luisa Lüthi

Interviewee (IE): Anais Focorlinski, Business Development Manager at Hotels & More

Interview number: 5

IR: Hi Anais. Thank you very much for taking the time for me, taking the time for me to talk to me today.

IE: No problem.

IR: First of all, I would like you to confirm that it’s okay that I use your results, your name which only goes to my university.

IE: No problem at all.

IR: Perfect, thank you. First of all, I mean you kind of know me, I’m Luisa, working in the Marketing team and we’re writing a project about how to approach the French market, what’s typical for the French, how they want to be addressed, how they want to communicate, what they want to see, basically what they want to do, basically market research. So, if you want to briefly introduce yourself, what exactly do you do within your team, yeah, that’d be great.

IE: Right, so I’m Anais and I work in the Sales team at Hotels & More. My position is business development manager and I basically work into the new business only. So everything that comes from people we never worked with before, or we lost them because we had issues in the past. So I work from scratch, so I need to get in touch with them and try to fix appointments, things like that and then obviously the sales team here in London will follow up with inquiries afterwards. So I’m just basically the first contact, try to find enquires and see what we can offer them. And then the sales team follows up and then I would see them again probably later on. So yeah, it’s a few months only that I’ve been doing that so I don’t have results yet, cause it’s about planting seeds. But hopefully shortly we’ll have results.

IR: Yeah. That’s … it sounds actually really interesting. Like, I mean I don’t know how…

IE: It does. It’s sometimes frustrating cause you know, we’re calling clients that … it’s a lot of, we have wasting time. We have clients where there are time consuming or you know they, I’m calling a lot of people and some of them are not doing England or are not interested at all, they’re selling other destinations, so … But when you have a fish and kind of like potential, you really want to show them the best and because we are the first, that usually is the first time we work with them, so they have no kind of idea who we are and … it’s great. And also to learn about the competition as well because most of them are working with our competition and it’s great to hear about them as well via other clients, so it’s really good, it’s really interesting.

IR: Yeah. And how do you basically start if you have a new potential client? How do you find them first of all?

IE: Okay. So what we have in France, it’s called “Les pages jaunes” which is a website that would register every single company in France and you just have to type … What I do, I have a map of France, Switzerland and Belgium cause we work on them – and we separate the France, we split them into two, cause it would be too much – so I just kind of concentrate myself into a county and I will just put the county name and like let’s say travel agencies, coach operator and it will come like registering. And I know about the existing that we have already, so I wouldn’t call them, but everything that sounds new or is new to me, and … you know I have to make a lot of researches before calling obviously, so it takes time. And then when I know that they do our destination, I will call them up and introduce myself. and tell them what we’re doing. Most of the time I will follow up with an email or create a sales lead in the system, so I can, I know myself, maybe they work into the brochure, let’s say in six months, I will call them up or, and if I have the chance... and if I see that there is a big potential in this area for example, I’ll definitely plan a business trip there. So that’s, yeah, that’s how I try to work right now which is great so far, it’s working and we just actually decided this morning that to me, when I have an enquiry, I will just give it to someone in sales, but now I have a person in particular that will take care of it cause... so it’s easier for me to keep track.

IR: Yeah, yeah.

IE: Because within the three people, four people it’s hard then to follow-up “ah okay, so you took care of this and (...)”. So now I have a person in particular for the new business, so (...) business, so it’s great.

IR: Nice!

IE: I think it’s gonna be effective.

IR: You’re talking about sales trips — so that’s basically mainly what you have to do when you’re in France, right? How often do you go on sales trips?

IE: So it’s, we’re trying to do that like a full week once a month. So yeah, and...

IR: And it’s only you?

IE: Yeah. Well, Marie Laure is also doing that, but because she’s, I mean leading the team here keeps her busy, but she does that, she tries to do at least once a month as well, a sales trip.

IR: And then what you basically do is you go there and you introduce... I mean what basically... they probably show you the office and...

IE: I use our lovely brochure that we have.

IR: You take the brochure with you?

IE: Yeah, yeah. I have a lot of brochures at home, so yeah, basically. They really appreciate it actually this year, how it’s done and most of them talk a lot about our Marketing stuff that we’re working on since we became TFG. We’re much more on social media and everything, so they know a bit about us which is really good.

IR: Yeah!

IE: Yeah, basically, the brochure it’s like, it’s really helpful for me, so I can present properly what we’re doing. Always start with TFG and then explain that I’m more Hotels & More and that’s what we’re doing. Obviously it depends on the end clients, if it’s more FIT then you would use other kinds of things, like I would print some scheduled departures beforehand, so it’s just yeah.

IR: Yeah, yeah. So do you think — so it’s great to hear that the brochure is helpful — do you think social media is a big thing in France, or for our clients basically, or more print documents?

IE: Depends who.

IR: Yeah.

IE: I have a few clients that would, that are following us on Facebook, but this is something I try to push it as well when we’re there. Because some of them, we... like let’s say the coach operator, they’re not keen on doing that. Well, they would some of them because they try to be trendy or they try to kind of renew, but most of them will not really do that. But I think it needs to be pushed because that’s really necessary. And I mean, no it’s... I’m trying to... the brochure is definitely something we have to keep and we can’t do an online brochure for example.

IR: Yeah.
IE: This is now way, because they love to have the paper there. And it’s there, it’s there. Because…and the business cards and (not understandable) they would remember me just because of that. But social media, I mean you can tell we don’t have a lot of followers.

IR: No…

IE: And even though, I sometimes… if I see that they are on social media and things like that, or Instagram, I would just “yeah, you can follow us as well, we have (not understandable).”

IR: Yeah, but it’s not like a priority?

IE: No, no. I’m thinking about all the kind of things that we could, but no. Apart from the brochure and social media we don’t do… A trade fair obviously.

IR: That was actually my next question. Like Top Resa there was, that’s I think the only French one we have, right?

IE: That we’re going.

IR: Yeah.

IE: They all… we used to go to the French two, which happens in February, I went. It’s every two years, it’s “Meet the French” and it’s in Paris. But we don’t go anymore because it’s not a big thing.

(Interview was interrupted by someone, continued later on, part 2 as below.)

IR: Okay, short interruption – interruption, do you say that?

IE: Yeah!

IR: But that’s fine, we’re just gonna keep on going where we stopped. Trade shows – we talked about Top Resa I think.

IE: Yeah, and I was saying that we have Top Resa, Top Resa is the main one. And it was two different, MaPro and Top Resa before and now it became the same trade fair now. It’s in September, so it’s the trade fair that we have to be there cause everyone is there. And yeah, there are others that we could obviously be. One in Marseille as well, a few trade fairs that you could, but we think that Top Resa is the main one and we have to be there, so it’s a full week, and it’s, yeah it’s a lot of, yeah it’s quite big.

IR: It’s a whole week? It’s in Paris, right?

IE: Yeah, it’s a whole week. Yeah, yeah it’s in Paris. And, yeah usually you make a lot of contacts and we don’t have… we try to take appointments, but again, different market. Like when I see the RDA for the German or any kind of trade fair, they would have the full schedule and they wouldn’t have so much time for the walking clients, so at least they will have someone who had to deal with it. What we do is more like, we take appointments, but again, French people they tend to cancel, they tend to “oh no, we won’t take appointment because you know, we don’t know really when we’re gonna be free and we will come and see you”. So you know that they will come, they usually do but it’s never German way. But it’s really, it’s really, yeah I think it’s really important and usually it’s effective afterwards, we do a follow-up, we send offers and yeah.

IR: Yeah. Talking about follow-ups: if you – I’m not sure how it works – if you for example contact a travel agency, potential travel agency, and they might tell you “yeah we’ll get back to you” or I mean, I don’t know how that usually works, do you think… how is it in the French market with the chasing? Do they like to be…?

IE: Pushed, yeah. I think no one likes to be pushed, right? Because at the end of the day everyone is busy and usually they take time to, to have a reply from the end client and they don’t want to push them either because they don’t want to be, to sound very pushy.

IR: Yeah.
IE: So again, it's, it's how it's always been with this company - compare it to the German that where you gave them a deadline, they usually they tend to respect it. In France you will never have, unless you're working with the Belgian maybe it's slightly different. But no one's gonna come back to you before the deadline saying like 'yeah, we (not understandable)'. You always have to call them up saying like 'look, your option is running out, I just wanted to remind you', 'oh, but yeah, that's fine Anais, you can confirm that'. I was like 'yeah, but you better tell me' you know, so they really kind of... you have to push them a lot. If you want them to confirm, you have to push them. Some of them you don't want to push them too much because it's all depends but yeah, they don't take it seriously when you have options dates. You always have to... It's not like we really want to be kind of clear without, but it's complicated. So, yeah.

IR: That's interesting.

IE: They would always have to push it anyway. 'Oh, yeah, but I haven't had time to talk to my client yet, can you push it again?'

IR: Yeah. Do you take - when you visit clients - do you take anything except brochures or any merchandise articles? Do you take like presentations with you, or do you ever hold any presentations or is it really just going there and saying this is what we do?

IE: Not yet. I always say to client who doesn't know the destination at all, that I'm happy if they have a big group like say more than 200 PAX. Sorry, if they want to have a presentation of the tour or because they have to do it. Usually they do a presentation to sell the package and I'm like 'If you need support, I'm happy to come as long as it's not, and if it's part of me being there and it's, you know, it works with the whole thing. And if it's a big fish, let's say it's a big series or things like that, I always tend to tell them 'look I'm happy to do a PowerPoint and come and present everything' but no, that's not something I've done yet, and... but I try to tell them I'm happy to do that. But I would take some of the, our calendars if I know that they're keen on that. One of our clients said 'oh, oh you're from Hotels and More, oh you're going UK, oh you're gonna come with a bottle of Whisky then? I was like 'hm, maybe we'll see, I'll come with the brochure first and then I'll see'. So, you don't need to bribe them.

IR: Yeah.

IE: To get the client there. They stay professional. It's not something that would work. Even though lots of them in competition, know they do that a lot I wouldn't be, I would feel uncomfortable, like coming with a, a thousands of goodies.

IR: Yeah, then it might feel like you are actually bribing them. 'We brought this, work with us.'

IE: Exactly. To me, I am, especially with my business - because I'm doing the new one - what's the point? You can come and have a thousand of goodies, you don't even know them, you don't know what's the proper potential. So I don't know. I wouldn't be keen on doing that, so the brochure is enough and then... I try to, if I had like a, one of our clients it was a big anniversary, I didn't know, but I realized on the spot. And then I sent them a calendar and a pen like via post saying 'oh that's for you', so I tend to do that a lot, a little bit, but yeah.

IR: Yeah, not priority.

IE: No, not at all.

IR: You said if they don't know anything about the destination - so there are travel agencies that might not do UK yet at all that you could contact?

IE: Oh yeah. Well, not that often.

IR: But if that happens? I mean they need to know something about the destination, right? So then it's basically your job to teach them what there is, what we have, or how...?

IE: Yeah. What I do is like a, usually if it's, if they don't feel comfortable... I have a client she is so cute and she called me up before she's gonna meet her client and she's like 'you know, Anais, I don't know London at all and I've never been there, but if my client is asking me blablabla... or some of our clients have also asked to prepare a PowerPoint, we don't really have time to do that. But we just tell them like 'look, if you have questions, give me a quick call. I'll answer you, so you feel more comfortable during your presentation, so...'. But we would never have anything to send to them, so we just...

IR: Yeah, I mean it would be very general anyways.

IE: Yeah.

IR: So whenever they have questions that you are basically the destination expert and they...

IE: Yeah. I tend to tell them 'Feel free, don't feel uncomfortable asking me. We are the ones that are happy to help, so...'. That's what I do.

IR: Yeah. I mean obviously it's important for everyone to find the right balance between the right product and the right price. How price sensitive do you think are the Frenchies?

IE: They're really price sensitive. They're not... I mean I saw it, you know, they have partnerships for years and years with an inbound company and when I go there, if we're cheaper, they will 'ah yeah, Anais I'll give it a try, even though I don't know you, I think if you're cheaper I'll go with you'. They really look at the price because at the end of the day what they wanna do is that the tours, the tour is selling and we all know that that people usually go to the cheaper.

IR: Yeah.

IE: So yeah, price is really important and that's why also we, yeah, the margin on the French market is so low right now because we need it to. Like the competition works on 1-2% margin, so you have to. Even though I know sometimes it's, you wonder if there is a mistake or like a, a budgeting mistake, then it's gonna be crazy, it's gonna be lost, but yeah, they're really sensitive to that, unfortunately.

IR: More sensitive to the German market for example, would you say?

IE: Well, it depends on clients on the German market, I know as well they, they... it depends on their client. Some of them are really faithful and they will stay even though it's one or two euros more. On the French market I'm not sure.

IR: If they would be loyal.

IE: Yeah. Yeah. They're not faithful and they always 'you know, Anais, there will be on us sometimes saying like 'it was two euros cheaper, even though I like to work with you, I need to, I have a budget', my director told me to get the cheaper and the best value for money, so I'll go to...'. So they would never... some of them would, but margin rating, it's strange, right? So you have to be really competitive.

IR: Maybe culture, politics play an important role as well. The travel of the French people in general. Do you think for example what happened in London – was it last year or two years ago, no last year I think it was –

IE: Yes, last year. Same year.

IR: On Borough Market. Do you think French people are very receptive to what's shown in the media and very influenced by it?

IE: Yeah. I mean...

IR: Did sales go down?

IE: Yeah. Well, when it had happened, we hardly had cancellations because people paid everything in advance, right? So during the high season they travelled, most of them. We only had one student group to cancel, which makes sense, students, you know, they travelling without parents, so they're obviously really worried. But we postponed the trip, we had a chance to postpone the trip for free to the next year. So you see, in that position they postponed the trip which means they're not really afraid anymore, but on the spot they were really afraid to come. Which doesn't really make sense because we all know that when it happens, it hardly happens the week after again. But they postponed the trip, so I was really surprised because (not understandable) in year, who knows that's gonna happen again the same time. And again, but then what happened is that the request for London for example, that dropped completely. And, but I think it's more like a, a thing as well — we had a lot of requests for London at four, five years ago maybe. And then all clients telling me you know, we had London, it was really trendy at that, and then it's coming back every four years, you will see, it's gonna come back, but now it's not London right now'. So you see, they go with the trendy thing, but I think the attacks obviously didn't (not understandable) you know we had so many attacks in France and it was, also we had one in a really small village and no one expected that. And people were really “oh, you know it happens anywhere, so if you go London, you go Berlin, if you go anywhere you're not really safe”.

IR: Yeah, true.

IE: Even in a small village, so Paris has been really affected by that, really, really deeply. But it's coming back bit by bit. But obviously you always have a drop, so yeah.

IR: That's probably, I mean you can't change it anyways and if you travel or not, but yeah it's...

IE: Yeah, some client would say “you know Anais, I'm not even keen on selling it because it doesn't work of all the attacks and... so I'm not trying to push them, cause some were really close to... but some of them will say “yeah but you know it happens everywhere anyway”, so I try... People always like London, French's love London, they love it, they love Royalty, like you would see over the news. I mean I'm pretty sure it's the same in Germany.

IR: Yeah, yeah.

IE: But they've always been really keen on London cause we're not that far as well, so, but yeah. We'll see.

IR: So you would also say London is the main thing?

IE: That's the main thing, like the main destination they think about when we talk about Great Britain, definitely.

IR: Yeah, yeah. Do you think they know much about any other? Like for example to Dublin, city trip if we talk about city trips.

IE: Dublin — because we had a lot of advertising from, for Ireland the past year, we kind of, everyone know the Irish and they know about beer and about how they're welcoming. So you know a little bit about Ireland, Scotland not much. Edinburgh, some people like, they don't even think about it.

Cornwall no way. And when I tell them “it's like Bretagne in France, you know it's really nice and it's cosial landscapes and everything, you know...” no, but it's mainly London, Canterbury that they know. They will have heard about Liverpool for the Beatles, but that's it. So it's really, when I try to sell them it's like “yeah, Anais, you're right, this sounds amazing, but you know it doesn't... our clients are not that receptive because they don't know, they've never heard about it”, I was like “yeah, but you have to push it, you know, I mean”... Who knew about Slovenia like a few years ago?

IR: Yeah, exactly.

IE: Who know about all those countries?

IR: But then yeah, it's the responsibility also for the travel agents to pass that on to their clients, right?
Because you can't really reach the end client anyways.

IE: Yeah, so you have to convince them first, so they can... But yeah, advertising helps a lot and because of... we have a lot for Ireland, so I think it helps you, know, and hopefully with VisitBritain as well, they're doing a campaign, I've seen that, so all of it plays even in Paris in cinemas, yeah so...

IR: It's actually interesting that there are companies that work with a Tourism board which is so smart.
Because yeah active advertisement on spot is difficult if you don't have any organisation there, but IE: Oh yeah, face to face is so important, yeah! That's why we agreed on me doing that basically.

IR: Maybe one last thing is interested to know – it's probably clear – that they only want to communicate in French. What if there would be a person not speaking French visiting them, do you think they would be…?

IE: It's funny, it's really funny. I think some of them will try, maybe in Paris that would work and not even...

IR: But in general...

IE: Yeah, they would be so scared, so scared. They wouldn't be confident in their English first. And it's obviously really hard to get them to find for you a time slot so you can meet them, (not understandable) always busy obviously. But no, the French language is so important to them.

IR: They hardly go direct, that's the thing. You would have a lot of Netherlands, or Belgium, Belgians go a bit direct sometimes, but even though, they like to have an inbound company, so you see they really like to have the French contact.

IR: Yeah, yeah, okay. I think that was it from my side, you actually helped me a lot, lot.

IE: Yeah? I'm glad.

IR: If there is anything else you would like to add?

IE: No, I think I mean unless you have further questions while you're writing your thingy, I'm happy to answer that.

IR: Perfect, thank you.

IE: So with… you know, I could think about something else to tell you, but if I do, I'll email you. But no, so far we covered.

IR: Perfect, thank you very much.

IE: Good luck with that!

IR: Thank you!

Des photos intéressantes sur les destinations ainsi que avec une bonne connecton vers les transports en commun.

- ras

- mettre en avant des visites ou lieux originaux, les expositions dont nous ne sommes pas informés, nous connaissons déjà les classiques

- Non je n'ai pas de commentaires dès que je reçoit une information je la transmet auprès des CE mais se sont eux qui prennent la décision finale

- sur les événements ponctuels avoir un onglet spécifique merci

- La dernière fois que j'ai fait un circuit avec vous j'ai constaté que vos adresses de restaurants étaient un peu obsolètes (trop loin des lieux visités) je pense que ça, c'est à améliorer surtout si vous avez comme clients des personnes des personnes seniors qui font des circuits culturels, mais je vous l'ai déjà dit je crois. Bonne chance et bon courage
